JANAN ALEXANDRA

heritage language

i.

i am beginning to learn after 30 years of exposure to words & sounds sculpted perfectly
in my mother’s throat
another kind of history there language & family bits sweetness in what is passed & scattered
like names
slid off a map

studying alone
at home
like sunlight
inside the morning
a tray of coffee & dates nearby on the starry kitchen counter powdered sugar
sifted finely
through thin mesh
hardly visible
in quick white dust

ii.

when we came to America
an archive locked
our teeth
fastened
around a silence
our lips made
hanging circles in the air
a shapely absence

my mother kept records
in her jewelry box:
a clutch of hair
wrapped in paper
the small sukuun
little roundness
keyhole, doorway
we peered through
