STEP 1: CREATE POSITIONS

A position is a seat in your organization.

To add headcount, you build a new seat using the Create Position action in Workday. You can also create positions as part of the Create Job Requisition process.

IMPORTANT: Creating a position is the technical part of adding headcount into your organization. You should only start the Create a Position process in Workday after you have received budget approval or discussed with your business leader.

Each seat has a Job Profile that describes the job and pay range for someone in that seat.

You can't recruit or hire associates until you build seats for them!

You can have empty seats, but every associate must have a seat.

STEP 2: FILL THE POSITIONS

You can fill positions only after they've been created and approved. (Exception: High-volume positions—drivers and outbound selectors—do not require approvals until later in the hiring process.)

For Competitive positions (for example, a new Warehouse Selector):

Start by creating a requisition using the Create Job Requisition action in Workday. A requisition is like a Help Wanted sign that shows you're ready to hire.

The person acting as Primary Recruiter for your organization will post the position and recruit candidates...

...and then hire the chosen candidate through Workday.

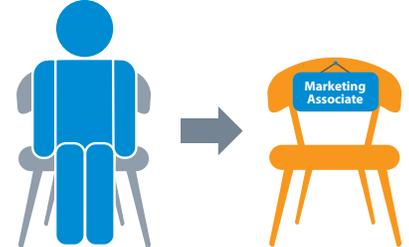

You can monitor the status in Workday. Once the hire is complete, you can find your new associate in Workday by typing his/her name into the search bar.

For Non-Competitive positions (for example, promoting a Sales Trainee to a Marketing Associate position):

No requisition is required. Just move the associate into the new seat using the Change Job action in Workday.

You can close the old seat/position if you don't need it anymore, or you can keep it and refill it by opening a new Job Requisition.

Promotions, Demotions and Non-Competitive Transfers Work the Same Way!

For promotions or demotions, build a new seat using the Create Position action (unless you already have a seat open with the same Job Profile). Then use the Change Job action to move the associate into it. For non-competitive transfers, the receiving manager creates the position.

If a position is filled competitively (through an internal job application process), the recruiter filling the position will initiate the transfer.

POSITION OVERLAP: A Special Feature of Workday

If an associate is leaving your organization soon, you don't have to create a new position for his replacement! Workday allows position overlap, meaning the current associate and new associate can temporarily share the same seat. You can select the Overlap Position option during the Termination business process in Workday for any termination that has a future date.

CLOSING POSITIONS

Closing positions is an important part of managing resources at Sysco. Each time you terminate an associate, you will be asked if you want to close the position. Keeping positions appropriately open or closing them if not needed allows Sysco to effectively manage resources.

WHEN to close positions:

When you have a change in your team, evaluate whether a vacated position should remain open (even if you aren't filling it right away) or should be closed. You should also review your open positions quarterly to decide if they should remain open for a longer period of time.

HOW to close positions:

1. Click the My Open Positions icon on the home page.
2. Place your cursor over a position name and click the orange Actions button.
3. Click Position Restrictions > Close Position.

POSITION MANAGEMENT FAQs

If I am backfilling a current position, do I need to create a position?

Generally, no. As long as you left the position open when you terminated or moved the associate who occupied the position before, you can go directly to Create Job Requisition. If the position was closed for some reason, you will need to start the process by creating a new position.

What should I do if I am unsure if I should create a position?

You should only create a position if you have financial authority to add headcount or you have received approval from your manager or someone with financial authorization to do so. While the system will allow you to submit a Create Position transaction, remember that it will route for approval unless it is a high-volume role (driver or outbound selector). So be sure you have permission to start this transaction. When in doubt, talk to your manager and/or HRBP for clarification.

What if the Job Profile I need isn't available for me to select when I try to create a position?

If a Job Profile isn't available, that means it has not been created by the Total Rewards team. Check with your HRBP to discuss your business needs and the process for requesting a new Sysco role.

What's the difference between Create Position and Create Job Requisition?

Create Position creates a seat or headcount in the organization. Create Job Requisition starts the process of creating the job posting. You can perform these steps separately, or you can create positions as part of the Create Job Requisition process.

What if I see positions on my team that aren't really valid or needed?

Closing positions is a judgement call. You should review your open positions quarterly. Is the position budgeted? Does your budget allow you to fill the position within the next 6 months? If you answer no to either of these questions, then go ahead and close the position.

Under what circumstances should I freeze a position or requisition instead of closing it?

If your organization experiences a budget freeze and you need to suspend staffing activities, you can temporarily freeze positions and/or requisitions instead of closing them. Doing so will allow you to pick up where you left off (after unfreezing them) instead of starting over.
