Penalty charge notice a draft redesign

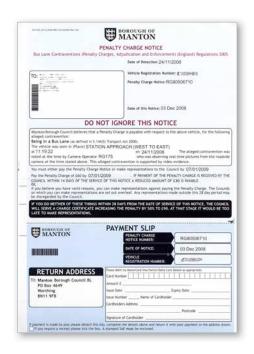

The Simplification Centre is a not-for-profit organisation that helps to make information clearer. Our Simple Actions bring together volunteer designers and writers to tackle communication problems no one appears to own.

The idea is to demonstrate how much better things can be, and to provide models of good practice.

You can find out more about this activity, and others, on our website:

www.simplificationcentre.org.uk

This Simple Action was developed by Rob Waller.

Assuming you are foolish or flustered enough to stray into a bus lane, which of these notices would you prefer to receive in the mail? Which would get you to the next step fastest: paying the penalty charge, or challenging on solid grounds?

Or, if you are a local authority, which one would be the most efficient, reduce the most enquiries and groundless appeals, and best represent your values?

We've used a real notice for this exercise, but have disguised the name of the local authority. This exercise was done in 2011 and current notices may look different.

Documents like this have often evolved over time, with new information added from time to time – for example, when the regulations change, or to cope with an operational problem.

- Everything competes for our attention, using bold type, capital letters, and black backgrounds including some things that are not very important, such as some of the headings highlighted in the payment slip.
- The 'story' is hidden.
 What has happened? What happens next?
- The language uses technical jargon, taken directly from the relevant government regulations:

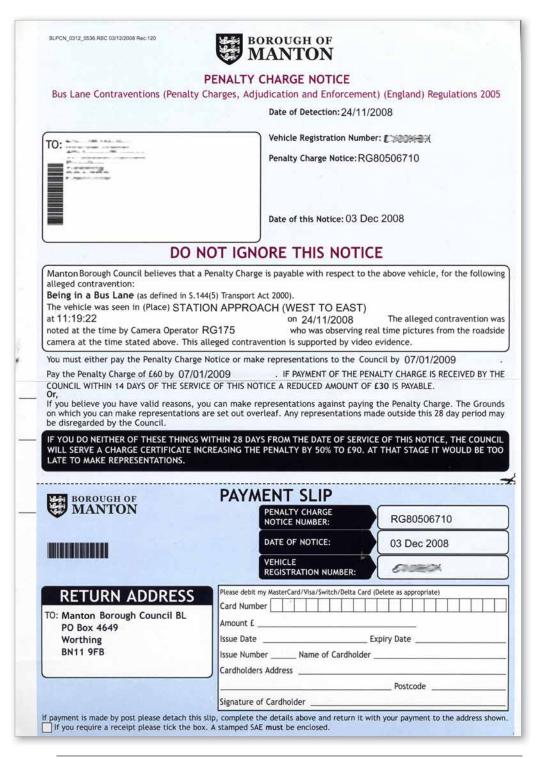

'The council will serve a charge certificate...' 'You can make representations...' 'The alleged contravention'

 It includes a number of features known to detract from legibility: long line lengths, extended passages in capital letters, white type on black, small print.

The original

If you've ever strayed into a bus lane, you may have received something like this in the post. You were probably unaware of your mistake, so this will have come as an unpleasant surprise.

The document has one merit at least – alarm bells ring when you open the envelope. It doesn't look like an everyday document you have seen before, and so know how to approach. Instead, everything competes for your attention, and you have to move around the page assembling your understanding of the situation piece by piece.

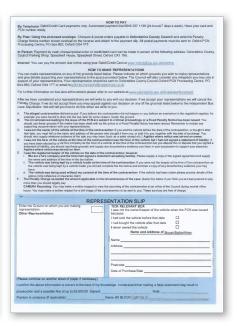

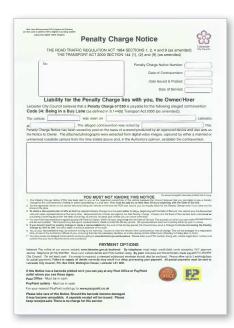

Penalty Charge Notices from other local authorities are similarly complex.

The redesign

The new design uses a design pattern that's often used for complex information such as insurance documents, forms or user guides. Clear headings sit in their own space on the left, so you can read down them for the main story. Thick rules divide off the sections, so you read in short chunks. And the language is simplified to reflect what it means to people, not how the regulations are worded.

- A clear title says what it is, and includes the context ('bus lane'). We thought about changing the title to 'traffic fine', but we decided that 'penalty charge' is now fairly familiar as a term.
- The left hand column tells a story in headline form. 'Your car was photographed...' 'The penalty' Then a choice of two actions: Appeal or Pay.
- The penalties and deadlines are given clearly, in equivalent terms (amount and deadline) and in terms meaningful to the recipient.
- · Actual dates are given, not'14 days from service of this notice' (what does that mean? When it was sent or when it was received?)
- The photographic evidence is included, making a more convincing case and potentially reducing appeals and queries. Also reduces sense of injustice for people who were unaware of their error.
- The payment slip includes all the different ways to pay.
- The box around the return address is a visual cue that the payment slip can be used in a window envelope.

The back: original

Packed with words, printed in long lines of small type, this is off-putting and intimidating.

- The language includes unusual terms rarely found in everyday usage: representation, mitigation, cite..
- You have to choose a code letter and write it at the bottom of the page – giving scope for mistakes. This also implies that you can only give one reason, which we believe is not the case.
- The box at the bottom right could confuse some people, if they do not realise that it is linked only to reason C.

The back: redesign

By moving the How to Pay information to the front, the back can focus on a single topic: the different grounds for challenging the penalty. Again, the left hand column is used to display each heading in its own space, making it easy to skim-read. It's now less intimidating, and makes it more likely people will deal with the issue quickly, rather than put it off.

- The How to Pay information has been shortened and moved the front, on the payment slip. It is now all in one place, rather than split between front and back.
- The various reasons have been translated into plain English.
- Tick boxes remove the need to write a code letter in the form at the bottom of the page, and allow more than one reason to be given.
- Reasons should be ordered in order of likely occurrence (we don't have that data, so have guessed for this mock-up).
- Further explanation is asked for immediately after the reason (for example, the date the car was bought or sold).
- One disadvantage: people need to send the whole form in, not just a slip, so would need to get a photocopy made. Alternatively this could be sent as a second, separate page.

What does the law say?

We have checked our redesign against the regulations and believe that we comply. We provide the information that is required, although we translate some of the technical wordings into plainer English. For example, instead of advising people to 'make representations' we use the term 'challenge'. In our first draft we used 'appeal' but were advised that this has a special meaning in law.

Official documents often reflect the wording of the regulations that they are implementing – and legislation is written for the primary purpose of defining the law precisely, not for ease of understanding. For example, when this notice uses the term 'serve a charge certificate' it is directly quoting from the Bus Lane Contraventions (Penalty Charges, Adjudication and Enforcement) (England) Regulations 2005.¹ But actually these regulations do not prescribe the exact wording for the notice, but simply specify the information that has to be there.

There is a great deal of case law in respect to both parking and bus lanes and some of the content of Penalty Charge Notices probably has the purpose of closing loopholes or responding to court judgements. There are a number of active websites advising people who have been sent Penalty Charge Notices about their various grounds for appeal.² Much of the discussion on these sites focuses on whether local authorities have communicated unambiguously and accurately – both on street signing, and on Penalty Charge Notices.

Bus lane and parking appeals are handled in England and Wales by the Traffic Penalty Tribunal (formerly known as the National Parking Adjudication Service). Their annual reports are refreshingly well written (entertaining, even) and pull no punches. Referring to new regulations that came into force in 2008, they comment that:

"It must be said the Adjudicators were somewhat disappointed by the complexity of the new legislation. The new Civil Enforcement of Parking Provisions are introduced in no fewer than six sets of Regulations for England and another set of Regulations that apply for Wales. These replace what now seems simple legislation of the Road Traffic Act 1991 itself and the Adjudicators' Regulations. Furthermore, the language used in the Regulations is obtuse and confusing.' (TPT 2008 page 8).³

¹ London has its own bus lane legislation: the London Local Authorities Act 1996. Scotland has The Bus Lane Contraventions (Charges, Adjudication and Enforcement) (Scotland) Regulations 2011.

This 'obtuse and confusing' language cannot have helped efforts to develop clearer documents. PATROL¹ is the body tasked with civil enforcement of parking regulations in England and Wales. In 2008 they commissioned an independent review of parking notices² which developed model documents which most local authorities use for parking enforcement (although they did not extend their work to bus lanes, as far as we have been able to tell).

Stephen Sauvain Q.C., who chaired the review, remarks in his foreword that:

'Over the last few months the Committee has produced a series of specimen documents which attempt to combine the essential requirements of the statutory regulations with principles of good practice and use of plain English. Inevitably conflicts have occurred between the desire to produce simple and easily understandable documents and the sometimes complex requirements of the regulations and statutory guidance.' (page 3).

Their recommended notice (left) is perhaps in plainer English than its predecessor, but many people will still struggle not only with the language, but also the lack of visual structure and the small size of type.

Cornwall Council's Penalty Charge Notice is closely based on the model notice published by PATROL. Reduced from 67mm x 160mm (as published in Cornwall's guidelines, which may not have printed it at actual size).

A technical word

The original is a template with spaces left for data to drop in. Our new design assumes a more complete and seamless data merge. That way, there are no awkward gaps, and precise dates can be merged in, instead of '14 days from the service of this notice'. This technology is very accessible, either in print centres of the sort used for direct mail or billing, or on office PCs using Word mailmerge templates.

Learnings

Assuming our redesign works, we might look to it not just for tips about penalty charges notices, but for some general principles of information design. For example:

- Use headlines to tell a story.
- Anticipate questions (for example, by including the photo evidence).
- Group related activities together (for example, where people have ticked that they did not own the car at the time, ask for the information about who bought or sold the car immediately, not at the foot of the form).
- Explain things from the user's viewpoint (for example, the three levels of fine, with deadlines).
- Use visual cues about possible responses (for example, the dotted line means 'tear off and send'; or the vertical column of tick boxes means 'choose one of these').
- Making very sparing use of visual disruption (that is, bold type, flashes, icons, etc. Here, the x to help you remember to sign depends for its effect on everything around it being 'quiet').

What might we expect the effect to be?

On the general principle that people engage more accurately and quickly with documents that are approachable and comprehensible, we would expect payments to speed up, but we would also expect more informed appeals, as the process would be more transparent. Faster payments could reduce local authority income because they are charged at a lower rate, but accurate appeals might be quicker to deal with, and the clearer photo evidence might mean there are fewer of them. It's not possible to say for sure without trying it.

But we think there's a more fundamental reason to communicate clearly. Literacy statistics show that a large proportion of the UK population (perhaps as many as 50% according the International Adult Literacy Surveys) struggle with complex information, and both local and central government have a duty of care to their citizens. They frequently demonstrate this duty of care in the way they communicate – for example, by providing translations of key communications into other languages, and by conforming to RNIB guidelines on the legibility of type. There seems no reason why documents about civil enforcement of driving regulations should be any different.

¹ The guidance on parking enforcement states that 'raising revenue should not be an objective of CPE [civil parking enforcement]'.

About Simple Actions

Most of us don't complain when we come across information that's poorly written or designed – for example, a mobile phone contract, an application form, or a user guide. We cope and make do, we blame ourselves for not being clever enough, we make mistakes, or if we have a choice we might just chuck it away. For one thing, it's probably not worth complaining, and we wouldn't know who to complain to anyway.

It's not obvious to everyone how to improve poor documents. A lot of everyday information could be better, but we've got used to it and assume that, like the rain, there's nothing we can do. But that's often not true, and with a little effort we can set much higher standards.

So the Simplification Centre has got together a group of volunteer information designers and writers to challenge the quality of everyday information.

They're working together to take on 'orphan design projects' – those communications that no one seems to own or look after, but which really matter. Their work will be published on the Simplification Centre website, where people can comment, or borrow the ideas under a Creative Commons license.
