

Latitude Horizon Fund

Investment Objective

The objective of the Latitude Horizon Fund is to deliver capital appreciation over the long term by holding a concentrated portfolio of stocks, whilst lowering the equity risk and enhancing returns through a selection of non-equity investments.

November Commentary

It's a Santa rally.

The recent disinflation on Main Street led to significant asset price reflation on Wall Street last month.

Bond yields fell, causing bond and equity prices to rise. Major stock and bond market index prices are now baking in an outcome where central banks have achieved a soft landing for the economy, and inflation was, after all, transitory.

Expectations are implying that interest rates will be cut multiple times next year (at least five in the US), helping to avoid a recession, without driving resurgent inflation.

The bears have been proved wrong this year, that's for sure, yet this Goldilocks scenario feels increasingly precarious, especially given the move higher in asset prices.

The rally in stock markets this year has been highly concentrated in a handful of companies. These share some common attributes: they are growing, they are extremely popular, and they are expensive.

For them to remain popular, at these valuations, shareholders certainly need confidence in a strong, disinflationary economy with falling interest rates. This may well be the case but requiring it to generate future returns is a highly risky strategy.

The key to risk management isn't worrying about missing a rally, but contemplating what could happen in the many different potential futures and investing accordingly.

We have benefitted hugely over the past seven years from our cyclical and growth exposure. Our defensive positioning in the past two years helped us avoid the bond market crash, and the equity market crash of 2022, although this has also clearly caused us to lag the market's recovery bounce this year.

As we enter 2024, we feel the financial markets are assuming a rather tranquil outlook, while we see a world economy fraught with difficulty and challenges and prefer to be positioned to benefit from any pickup in volatility, as opposed to for a continuation of the past.

Wishing you and your families a wonderful Christmas, from everyone at Latitude.
