Respect for Governmental Authority

TEXT: Daniel 6:1-5; Romans 13:1-8; 1 Peter 2:13-17  SUPPLEMENTAL SCRIPTURES: Matthew 22:21; 1 Timothy 2:1,2; Titus 3:1  KEY VERSE: Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter. — Ecclesiastes one of the most beautiful examples of proper conduct toward governmental authority in all the Bi given to us in the life of Daniel. Here was a Hebrew lad, perhaps of princely descent, who found his forcibly torn away from his people and homeland, and placed in a heathen court in the city of Bat Being a captive (essentially a slave), it would have been easy for him to hate his captors and feel rement and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record show. Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyed civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, becord his trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clinext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperand obedience to authority, with the power of appeal to that authority?
KEY VERSE: Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter. — Ecclesiastes of the most beautiful examples of proper conduct toward governmental authority in all the Birgiven to us in the life of Daniel. Here was a Hebrew lad, perhaps of princely descent, who found his forcibly torn away from his people and homeland, and placed in a heathen court in the city of Baberian a captive (essentially a slave), it would have been easy for him to hate his captors and feel rement and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record shows Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyed civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, be of his trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clinext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperative in the condition of the spirit of cooperative in the spirit of cooperative in the ruling monarch, he administered that law.
One of the most beautiful examples of proper conduct toward governmental authority in all the Bi given to us in the life of Daniel. Here was a Hebrew lad, perhaps of princely descent, who found hi forcibly torn away from his people and homeland, and placed in a heathen court in the city of Bat Being a captive (essentially a slave), it would have been easy for him to hate his captors and feel rement and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record shown Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyed civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, bed of his trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clinext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperative in the conflict with god's Law; but to blend the spirit of cooperative to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.
One of the most beautiful examples of proper conduct toward governmental authority in all the Bi given to us in the life of Daniel. Here was a Hebrew lad, perhaps of princely descent, who found hi forcibly torn away from his people and homeland, and placed in a heathen court in the city of Bat Being a captive (essentially a slave), it would have been easy for him to hate his captors and feel rement and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record show Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyed civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, begoth is trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clinext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperation.
given to us in the life of Daniel. Here was a Hebrew lad, perhaps of princely descent, who found his forcibly torn away from his people and homeland, and placed in a heathen court in the city of Bab Being a captive (essentially a slave), it would have been easy for him to hate his captors and feel rement and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record shows Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyed civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, become find the first trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clanext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperative in the conflict with God's Law; but he captured that law.
forcibly torn away from his people and homeland, and placed in a heathen court in the city of Bats Being a captive (essentially a slave), it would have been easy for him to hate his captors and feel rement and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record shows Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeye civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, becof his trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clanext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperative in the capture of the properties of the prope
Being a captive (essentially a slave), it would have been easy for him to hate his captors and feel rement and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record shows Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyed civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, become first trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clanext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperative in the record shows and record in the record ment and rebellion. Instead, even after much testing and many years of service, the record shows Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyed civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, become find the first trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-classest to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they are allowed the people could find no fault with him they are allowed the people could find no fault with him they are allowed they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed they are allowed they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are allowed to be people could find no fault with him they are Daniel was so cooperative in this foreign environment that the people could find no fault with him they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyer civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, become find the god and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clanext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperation.
they wrote a law which required him to choose between God and King Darius. He not only obeyer civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, become find the first structure of his trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clanext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperation.
civil law of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians where it did not conflict with God's Law; but, become of his trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clanext to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperation.
of his trust in God and God-given wisdom, he actually rose to a position where, as the man-in-clear to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooperation.
next to the ruling monarch, he administered that law.  1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooper
1. In what way did the young exile, Daniel (Daniel 1:1-16), show us how to blend the spirit of cooper and obedience to authority, with the power of appeal to that authority?
2. Why do you think Paul and Peter, through inspiration of the Holy Spirit, instructed followers of the to obey governmental authority?

24
		_
	Christ or gather with other Christians to worship God. What would you seek to do about the situation, and why?
	7. Suppose, for a moment, that you live in a totalitarian state where you are forbidden to openly declare
	6. What should the Christian's attitude be toward existing tax laws?
	5. Clip from a current newspaper or magazine an article showing how a "minor" infraction of the law led to a major problem. Take the article and be ready to discuss it in class.
	4. According to Romans 13:5, what are two motivating factors for keeping the law?
	3. List two laws with which you are acquainted, and the benefits of obeying these laws.	