LIBERTY IN NORTH KOREA
As I reflect on 2022, my mind goes straight to the end of the year. To the return of rescues. For the past two years, we were unsure if we would ever have the chance to say this again. But the unwavering hope of our North Korean friends kept us going. And after a painstakingly long pause in our rescue work in China due to border lockdowns and restrictions on movement during the pandemic, we were finally able to begin moving people safely again.

We are moving cautiously and costs have become volatile, but our commitment is stronger than ever to continue helping North Korean refugees reach freedom.

In my nearly 20 years of working on this issue, I’ve learned that the North Korean people are resilient beyond measure. Despite facing unimaginable difficulties, unprecedented lockdowns, worsening food shortages, and increased isolation from the outside world, they are pushing forward. They are finding ways to survive, taking risks to live better lives, challenging the status quo, and creating change.

However, despite their incredible resilience in recent years, the extreme challenges facing North Korean people have been absent from the broader dialogue around global human rights issues, and especially on North Korea policy. I feel a greater sense of urgency that we must do more before these issues that have been overlooked for too long are forgotten.

As I think about the ambitious plans ahead of us, I know that I can only feel this excited and confident about where we are heading because of the tenacity of the North Korean people and the steadfast support of this movement.
I am immensely grateful to our supporters - for your staunch belief in our vision, for showing up to mentor and tutor, for writing letters to North Korean refugees and selling boba and cake pops to fundraise, for donating flights and hotel rooms, for inviting our Advocacy Fellows into your homes and to the Grand Canyon. Thank you for standing tirelessly with us and for investing generously in our mission.

We can’t predict what the future holds or when the North Korean people will finally win their freedom, but it is without a doubt that we will achieve this together with our North Korean friends. And the impact we made last year and the work we are accomplishing together this year will bring us even closer to that day.

In solidarity, Hannah Song

Refugee Rescues
2022 was the year we finally regained momentum in refugee rescues. Since the start of the pandemic, extreme border lockdowns and unprecedented restrictions made the journey nearly impossible and left many vulnerable refugees stuck in hiding. But the North Korean people didn’t give up, and neither did we. Despite these challenges, our field team maintained our networks, sought out new routes, and found ways to adapt to increased surveillance and checkpoints in China, finally making rescues a reality again in late 2022 and helping 3 North Korean women reach freedom.

We also worked with the U.S. Government to help unique and exceptional cases of North Koreans in third countries come to the United States utilizing a process known as “Humanitarian Parole” (HP). Last year, 2 people arrived through this process.

“I thought I’d never be able to escape China. After the pandemic, I’d only heard of people getting arrested while trying to leave. It feels surreal that I’ve made it to safety, where I’m speaking Korean again and having Korean food. The years I spent in China were so hard. At this very moment, there are so many more North Korean women like me who are struggling and desperately hoping to reach freedom. Please rescue the people who are still left.”

Resettlement Support
Once North Koreans reach freedom, a new journey begins. Our team provides resettlement support, community, and access to resources to help North Korean refugees succeed in their new lives.

Humanitarian Parole cases arrive in the U.S. without status and are ineligible for the usual refugee resettlement benefits from the government. As a result, LiNK provided full fiscal sponsorship and support for case management, housing and financial assistance, interpretation and translation services, and coordinating legal needs to receive status.

Empowering Agents of Change
As North Korean refugees resettle and begin navigating their new lives, many aspire to not only find success, but also work towards impacting this issue. With access to the tools they need, North Koreans have unlimited potential. We work with them to build their capacity and confidence as leaders and agents of change. They’re sharing their perspectives and stories with audiences around the world, changing the narrative, educating people, and mobilizing global support. They’re sending money and information back to their families in North Korea, helping to accelerate change from the bottom up. Most importantly, they’re proving the potential of 25 million people inside North Korea still striving towards freedom and a better future.

The Advocacy Fellows program cultivates the next generation of North Korean leaders, storytellers, and advocates. We believe they’ll be the ones to create a new vision for North Korea and spearhead that change.

22 SPEAKING EVENTS
7 STATES VISITED
1500+ PEOPLE REACHED IN-PERSON
17 SUPPORTER MEETINGS
5 STAKEHOLDER MEETINGS

In 2022, Fellows returned to the U.S. for the first time in three years. They participated in workshops to grow their capacity and effectiveness as advocates, spoke to audiences across the U.S., and worked on digital media projects. LiNK Fellows were able to successfully bring a greater focus to the North Korean people and human rights issues.

“As an Advocacy Fellow, I am so happy that I can share my story with people and do something for others. I hope that now when these students think about North Korea, they remember the people, not the regime or nuclear weapons. I strongly believe that every person who does will help us in the fight for the human rights and freedom of the North Korean people.”

Hannah was born in North Korea in 2000. She escaped North Korea in 2015 and lived in China before resettling in South Korea in 2017. Hannah is currently a 2nd year at Kookmin University, studying Chinese Language and Literature. She hopes to make known the human rights abuses occurring in North Korea and China, and create a world where her daughter can grow up to pursue her dreams.

Nicky was born in North Korea in 1997. She escaped in 2007 and resettled in South Korea. She’s currently a 4th year Nursing major. She hopes to share about her own experiences as a North Korean living in South Korea to shed light on and help change the prejudice North Koreans face in and outside of North Korea.

As a Fellow, he’s sharing his story to help change people’s perspectives on this issue and prepare for the reunification he longs to see.
LiNK English Language Program

A consistently reported challenge we hear from North Koreans is English language ability. It’s not only an essential skill for access to educational and career opportunities – it’s a tool to promote self-efficacy and narrative agency. This year, we continued to expand our LiNK English Language program (LELP) in South Korea to meet this growing need. Students were matched 1:1 with volunteer tutors, emerging with not only the confidence and communication skills to advocate for themselves, but also with new connections that will last a lifetime.
“Even if our English improvement doesn’t seem very noticeable right away, thanks to all of you, us resettled North Korean students could overcome our fear of English, share with the world about the human rights violations in North Korea, and gain confidence to accomplish our goals in this new society. Thanks so much to all the volunteer buddies for dedicating their time and efforts for us.”

Changemakers Scholarship

As more resettled North Koreans seek opportunities in higher education, many do so with the desire to also make an impact on this issue. For North Koreans who are interested in growing as activists through their studies or extracurricular activities, LiNK offers six months of financial support to these students through the Changemakers Scholarship. 90% of recipients expressed that receiving the scholarship gave greater financial stability so they could focus more on their education and advocacy work.

“Thanks to this scholarship, I had more time to focus more on my studies and participate in various North Korea issue-related activities. Moreover, I learned many things from the other program participants. I am happy and thankful to have met these wonderful people. The past 6 months passed so fast.”

Professional Mentorship Program

Many North Korean refugees in the U.S. have a difficult time finding professional development opportunities and navigating their career options. So we connect them 1:1 with mentors who provide guidance on specific areas of expertise or interest. Previous mentors have supported areas such as resume building, interview strategies, financial management, investing, and counseling.

By building the capability of North Korean refugees today, they become agents of change who are equipped with the tools and skills to help their communities and impact this issue in the long term.
“Through the program and my mentor’s help, I learned how I can use what I’ve studied about computer science in the real world.”

Workshops

To help build confidence and skill sets for resettled North Koreans to achieve their educational and academic goals, we partner with outside experts and organizations to host workshops.

In Seoul, we hosted a one-day workshop on public speaking and storytelling with Professor Min Young Park, an expert in this field. 67% of participants said that the workshop helped with public speaking at school or work including those preparing for university entrance interviews, job interviews, running their own YouTube channels, or even giving lectures.
Joy Kim

Joy reached freedom through LiNK’s networks in 2013. She was one of our 2019 Advocacy Fellows and a bold university student studying social work with a dream to help multicultural families in South Korea. Today, she’s working at an alternative school for North Korean refugees and their children as the first North Korea-born teacher, and has grown as an advocate for North Korean human rights!

Geumhyok Kim

Geumhyok escaped North Korea alone and had to rebuild his life from the ground up. In 2018, he was part of LiNK’s Advocacy Fellows program, where he honed his voice as a storyteller and activist. Since then, he’s graduated from one of South Korea’s top universities, created a popular YouTube channel sharing information about North Korea, and started a family of his own!
Accelerating Change in North Korea
With ongoing pandemic-related border closures and restrictions on movement, the information landscape in North Korea has become even more challenging in recent years. This makes efforts to increase the North Korean people’s access to information that much more important.

Since 2020, the Kim regime has passed new laws that further cracked down on the spread of foreign media and information among North Korean citizens. Many information distributors have paused high-risk activities due to the hostile operating environment in China and North Korea’s tightly sealed border.
North Korean defectors consistently say that increasing people’s access to outside information is one of the most effective ways to accelerate change inside the country.

Labs is our space to collaborate, innovate, and develop new initiatives to empower North Korean people with information and technology from the outside world.

Much of this work must remain highly confidential to be effective, but key areas of focus will include collaborating with external partners, including recent defectors who can share feedback, insights, and information on recent changes to the information landscape in North Korea; creating and curating content tailored for North Koreans in-country; and developing new technologies or adapting existing ones for use in-country.

In May, we hosted a Tech Dinner with donors and thought leaders in Los Angeles to discuss existing plans and brainstorm technical ideas.
Changing the Narrative on North Korea
While dictators and nuclear missiles command headlines about North Korea, they erase the real heart of the country – its people. This is what the regime wants, to control the narrative both domestically and internationally. So when North Korean defectors share their authentic stories and perspectives, it’s a powerful act of defiance and a crucial way to change perspectives on North Korea.

LiNK amplifies North Korean voices through online media, documentaries, and events, and empowers North Koreans to take authorship over their own stories.

LiNK English Language Program: Meet the Students of Fall 2021

A recently reported challenge we face from North Korean defectors in English language ability, which is called ‘bicultural shock’ and can sometimes occur when a defector returns to North Korea. It describes how, in the U.S., an English Language Program (ELP) can help defectors improve their English, and through improved English, improve their employability in the U.S. In addition, the program can provide skills that can help defectors when they return to North Korea.

Seo Hyun-doo: I love how South Korea is on her own path, though they almost got...
This year, we launched our most audacious call to action yet. Up until now, the scale of humanity’s response to this issue has not matched the scale of this challenge and the oppression that the North Korean people face. They deserve our support, and the support of a movement so large that this issue can’t be ignored.

We set a goal to mobilize 25 million Allies – one for every person in North Korea. Each Ally is crucial to convey the importance of this issue, not just for advocacy or policy, but for the North Korean people. We want them to know that all around the world, we are standing with them in solidarity and support as they achieve their freedom.
LiNK Teams

LiNK Teams are student and community groups across the globe. They represent the next generation of leaders on this issue and are committed to seeing the North Korean people achieve their liberty in our lifetime. They bring fresh creativity and energy to the movement, helping to change the narrative in their local communities and raise funds to support North Korean refugees.
LiNK in the Media

We continued to work with international media outlets and advocate for a people-centered approach to reporting on North Korea, taking every opportunity to bring attention to the authentic stories of North Koreans and how they’re changing their country. This year we reached the milestone of over 1,000 historic media mentions!

MENTIONS IN MEDIA BROADCASTED INTO NORTH KOREA
Despite sharing a border and heritage with North Korea, the general public in South Korea has become increasingly disengaged from the issue. For decades, the narrative has been centered on politics and the threat of war, and this has contributed to creating an unwelcome environment for many North Korean refugees resettling in South Korea. We’re working to humanize people’s perspective of North Korea and raise a new generation of South Korean activists.
Co-Creators

The Co-Creators program brings North and South Korean students together to increase their understanding of the issue and to work on collaborative advocacy projects. They pitched ideas, trained with us to improve writing and storytelling skills, and then executed their concepts in the public sphere. Through this program, South Korean students changed their perspectives on the people of North Korea, and North Korean students also changed their perspectives on the importance of this movement and also their own voices.

We believe it will be this new generation of young North and South Korean activists who will influence government policy and public attitudes towards North Korea, and will be crucial in shaping the country’s future when North Korea is finally free.

“This program was a turning point for me! Before joining, I had not shared with anyone that I’m from North Korea because of prejudice against North Koreans. As I participated in Co-Creators, I learned that I can help with these issues in South Korea and even recognized my own prejudice.”

The Co-Creators program culminated with a three-day advocacy event themed after the Jangmadang, people-driven markets in North Korea. Guests could visit interactive booths to learn more about the issue and how they can get involved.

From a travel booth showcasing different regions in North Korea to a perfume station with scents based on North Koreans’ feelings of nostalgia, these young changemakers found creative ways to engage with new audiences!
