Sikh institutions need to clearly state their political or religious bent & keep them separate. While gurmat & gurbani should inform our political endeavors, our political aspirants & participants cannot straddle both platforms. I believe that the core Sikh ethos include what Guru Nanak Dev ji had mainly preached, such as, naam japo, kirat karo, vand shako, equality at "all" levels and being non judgemental. These ethos work for the food of all humanity and the politics should also be based on these values, regardless of what religion someone have. First and foremost, keep politics out of US gurdwaras - particularly if it about Punjab, India, or Khalistan. It has been a big turn off for a lot of young people because nearly all political discussions (in and around religious settings or religious groups) are built upon a lot of negativity and it goes against the path Guru Nanak showed to a Sikh.	2020-10-20 17:04:01	2020-10-20 17:10:33	0f2dadfb8b

I think the issue of consensus and representation is paramount. Too often small groups of Sikhs become involved in politics, claiming to represent all Sikhs. It is imperative that Sikhs work from a consensus-decision-making model and realize that we are diverse. One single organization can not claim to represent all Sikhs in matters of politics. With regards to ethos, having our political views be informed by Gurbani and our teachings is paramount. We must work from a lens of inclusivity.	2020-10-20 16:59:29	2020-10-20 17:04:38	f9498c7dc9

Political engagement needs to be issue and not personality focused. Sikh institutions need to have clear strategies and policies which reflect Sikh ethos and create the platform to allow issue based political engagement. The key challenge in being effective as a community requires unity of cause amongst Sikhs - ought to be easy as Sikh Ethos should be the uniting factor. Growing up, my family never discussed politics with me and that was a lost opportunity. Politics are rooted in human behavior with people discussing human issues. It requires a sense of moral code/ethics/compassion . Your religion informs these things and I think that cannot be ignored. So much of politics is influenced by culture and the people around you. I want to look inside The Granth Sahib for answers instead of being a "follower" of pop culture.	2020-10-13 01:13:46	2020-10-13 01:23:38	ad70edd357

Begin with Gurbani to be an ethical person and khalsa (by that I mean standing up for what is right);if our actions are hukam from waheguru, then there will be a venue (whether as an individual, as a leader, within/or outside of a political party, etc) to effect change. My perspective is that our duty is both to Sikh and non-Sikh -to all humans and ethically means working within established current legal systems if we can. There needs to be a community local-to-regional-to-national stakeholder engagement and consultation. We need to reform our political centres regardless where we are or live, create local units that inform the regional levels (similar to what Ram Singh Namdhari did) combined with our eternal institutions such as bungas, deras and schools. With these systems established, we can then move towards meaningful changes and growth strategies such as community philanthropy, community centers, etc.	2020-10-12 20:12:00	2020-10-12 20:20:19	989107c85e

Some of the answers are complex and hard to capture in the options provided in prior questions. For example I would prefer religion takes precedence over political process, but living in a country where Sikhs are a tiny minority, it is in our best interest that religion and politics are kept separate. Also, in absence of a Sikh Sovereign state, we have no choice but to make accommodations for the existing political conditions. Starting point is making Sikhi a way of life for younger generation.	2020-10-12 19:59:59	2020-10-12 20:11:59	620180c9ea

Kings of the past and present (elected ones) need spiritual engagement. 'Rajee Chuli Nyaaoo Ki' is the everlasting teaching of Gurbani. Sikh institutions should -Seek from politics accountability for benefit of all - 'Sarbat Da Bhalla' and not only for the benefit of 'Sikhs' and remind the King of 'Justice/Nyaaoo'. -Be un-reliant and repulsive to any political patronage in order to 'spread the message of Sikhism'. Gurbani doesn't need political support but the Political needs Gurbani for wisdom.	2020-10-12 17:01:46	2020-10-12 18:26:12	5842ad0b43

First realize Begampura can be established only through Sikh religious way of life. All old religions can see them self in Sikhi life style but not vice versa. So as masses understand that should be the way of teaching/engagement. Not any fixed path. Guru Granth teach Sikhi concept in many different ways as it sees the audience it encounter. The issue of politics ethos does not arise (loosely can be called Miri) unless Piri is founded strongly as Miri stands on Piri.	2020-10-12 17:26:52	2020-10-12 17:35:17	d23cb6a49

Grassroots democracy and leadership development. Gurdwaras have to stop being places for power-hungry uncles to exercise their desires for authority over others. New decentralized leadership models should be explored. Gurdwaras should also be places of deep political engagement about the critical issues of our times from a Sikh angle - immigration, structural racism, police violence, LGBTQ liberation, gendered violence, anti-war, etc	2020-10-12 16:53:51	2020-10-12 16:58:50	a371103270

In my opinion, as Sikhs, we should be fully involved based on the issues that impact our lives directly or indirectly regardless of where we live and/or what political party we recognize ourselves with. Sikh Gurdwaras and other institutions should allow for the political parties, candidates to address the Sangat to educate about their stand on the issues and NOT promote one party/candidate over others. We should be well-informed on the issues and make our decision in the light of Gurbani.	2020-10-12 16:49:39	2020-10-12 16:57:22	45bdcf51e
