

Pelvic floor rehabilitation immediately following childbirth

"Everything starts with a good explanation and sufficient understanding about your pelvic floor." Many women experience pelvic floor problems.

Do not feel ashamed: talk to your gynaecologist, midwife or pelvic floor specialist about it and get those pelvic floor muscles moving!

Why?

Following pregnancy and childbirth, your muscles may have weakened or be damaged. The Pelvic Floor gives you information & tips to prevent complaints; or to treat complaints and muscles to do their work better again.

Exercise your pelvic floor muscles

- 1 Immediately after giving birth, these exercises do not hurt (quality rather than quantity).
- Focus on controlling the pelvic floor:

 try to feel your muscles again,
 contract them (as if you were peeing or holding back wind) and let go again.

- Preferably daily, in three sets of 12 repetitions "briefly contract and release gently". Aim for five minutes a day.
- Get into the habit of doing your exercises daily for up to six months postpartum.

Heal, recover, strengthen & resume

How?

After the weight of pregnancy and, for some women, the additional stretch or damage caused by a vaginal birth, our pelvic floor needs a period of recovery.

Tips

To avoid lasting complaints.

Exercise correctly

- Always ensure that you both contract and relax your muscles correctly
- Perform a constricting and lifting movement with your muscles
- Relax your abdominal muscles, buttocks and thigh muscles. Do not tilt your pelvis.
- Take calm breaths
- Make sure your exercises are checked by a pelvic floor physiotherapist: with a bit of help, more than 90% of women quickly feel better!
- Practise lying down, sitting and standing up

Pain

- Apply ice to the painful area and be patient, it will heal
- Get used to sitting on a hard chair regularly.
 The pressure helps to reduce swelling

Going to the toilet..

Maintain a good posture on the toilet:

- Make sure your buttocks are firmly supported by the seat and place your feet on the floor or on a step
- Take your time on the toilet
- Relax your pelvic floor (even if it sometimes hurts a bit)
- Empty your bladder slowly but completely and do not press too hard on the bowels

"Every woman at her own pace"

Comfort

- Listen to your body: comfort is everything
- If you have pain, change your position regularly
- Avoid too much physical strain and try not to cough
- Moving around is recommended but start easy. Try to take a daily walk, gradually increasing the pace and distance

Daily life and sports during the first six weeks

Of course you can be active! How far can you take it?

Comfort and support are key

Support

- Find support and help in your community
- Make sure that your recovering body is supported with pillows when you rest (supportive underwear can also help)
- Breathe relaxed. You are allowed to sigh!
- Make sure you get enough sleep and rest: your body needs a lot of energy to recover

After a recovery phase of six weeks...

you can gradually decrease your comfort and support and focus more on active exercises and sports that promote the recovery of your abdominal muscles and your general health.
