

Spacekit Artist Series Returns with Limited-Edition Designs

Acoustic art collection expansion features the work of award-winning artists

Lititz, PA - The Spacekit Artist Series was developed to showcase designs gleaned from the brand's team of award-winning artists. Through this limited-edition series, Spacekit is celebrating each artist's personal creative style which is derived from meaningful influences and experiences.

Stitched together by the highly creative mind of production designer, Andi Blady, Loom blends beautiful lines with complementary colors to create a modern and sophisticated look. As the newest design to join the Spacekit Acoustic Art collection, it features an abstract take on weaving and stitching along with some irregularity for visual interest. While some may spy the notion of tapestries and quilts, Loom can also recall the whimsy of potholder looms that many of us created in elementary school art class.

ANDI BLADY

Blady built upon the previous designs in the Spacekit Acoustics collection, three designs called Squarehaus, Roundhaus and Geo-Shapes which are all Bauhaus-inspired. "I started exploring some of the women artists that contributed to the Bauhaus movement, especially those that focused on textiles. A key material of this product is felt. That tactile element reinforced a direction focused on fabrics, weaving, looms and of course, the signature look of warp and weft fibers. After playing with this criss cross motif, I appreciated that it reflected a bold and uniform graphic pattern, but then it strayed into this irregular, imperfect moment."

Acoustic properties are gained by a field of durable, 0.4" thick felt at the center of each panel. Each of the three panel colorways, which stem from researched Bauhaus color theory, are paired with interchangeable felt color options. This sound dampening artwork minimizes echoes and helps remove unwanted acoustics, earning a Noise Reduction Coefficient (NRC) Rating of 0.40. Enjoy a less noisy environment by hanging a 19.7" x 19.7" panel by itself or pieced together with additional panels to configure a custom arrangement. Loom is the second design featured in the Spacekit Artist Series.
