Farrells

Farrells is an internationally recognised architect-planner. They have designed award-winning buildings and master plans throughout the world for over half a century, from the refurbishment of Grade-1 listed buildings in London to the tallest building in the world by a British architect in Shenzhen.

They believe design should always be informed by context and 'place'. Architectural design grows organically, tailor-made to specific circumstances and community needs.

Their specialism is high quality, mixed-use urban complexes, often based around transport interchanges. They are responsive, imaginative and skilled in design and have a passion for environmental sustainability, using resources wisely and creating resilient communities.

They work collaboratively and their designers engage with the evolution, layering and everyday use of a place. The architecture grows organically, delivered through carefully considered processes starting with the big picture into the detail design and through construction, always responding to the needs of existing and new communities as well as our clients.

They have an unrivalled track record in securing planning consents and influencing public policy. The Farrell Review of Architecture and the Built Environment, commissioned by the UK Government, was described by the Culture Minister as "the most thorough and wide-ranging exercise that has taken place in this sector for generations". They are at the leading edge of thinking about city making.

"Breathing new life into an older part of Chelsea took inspiration, ingenuity, enterprise and ambition. And something else: dedication to the principles and practices of regeneration. Sir Terry Farrell is one of the world's most pre-eminent Post-Modernist architects and one of the world's distinguished masters in urban planning.

Above all, he has mastered the art of regeneration, and at Chelsea Waterfront created a thing of beauty, through reinvention and restoration."
