Abu Bakr: A Great Leader

Abu Bakr Siddiq (r) spent his early childhood, like other Arab children of the time, among the Bedouins. In his early years, he played with the camel calves and goats, and his love for camels earned him the nickname of Abu Bakr, meaning “the father of the camel's calf.”

In 591 AD at the age of 18, Abu Bakr (r) went into trade and adopted the profession of a fabric merchant, which was his family's business. He started his business with the capital of forty thousand dirhams. Within a few years Abu Bakr (r) had traveled extensively, doing business in various countries. Due to his success, Abu Bakr (r) came to be recognized as chief of his tribe because of his many qualities such as knowledge about the history of Arab tribes, politics, trade/business, and his kind demeanor.

Even before Islam, Abu Bakr Siddiq (r) had great ethics, and good character within the ignorant society. He was well-known among the people in Makkah as a leader in terms of morality and values. He was the closest companion of the Prophet (s) and the father of Aisha (r), the wife of the Prophet (s)
