‘Keep Quiet’ filmmakers begin filming new movie in Cheyenne and Arapaho Country

Rosemary Stephens,
Editor-in-Chief

(CONCHO, OK) Keeping quiet about a film crew filming at the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes headquarters in Concho, Okla., was the goal ... and that goal was almost successful. Well almost.

Within an hour of actors Lou Diamond Phillips and Tommy Schulz being spotted in Concho, Social Media came alive with cell phone pictures and videos. The film ... “Keep Quiet,” being filmed was no longer quiet.

Scenes for the upcoming movie, ‘Keep Quiet,’ was filmed in and around Concho on Jan. 23, including with the bison herd and in/around the unique murals painted by Steven Grounds.

“All of this is a first for our tribe and I hope to see future endeavors such as this,” Christine Morton, tribal planner for the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes Planning & Development Program, said.

“Keep Quiet” is a story about a Native police officer, Teddy Littlechild (played by Lou Diamond Phillips) with the Thunderstone Tribal Police Department, who has dedicated his life to protecting the reserve he was born and raised on. Tormented by a mysterious shame that has isolated him from his people, he is tasked with teaching his naïve new partner Sandra Gursky (played by Dana Namerode) how policing is different on the reservation.

Meanwhile, recently released from prison and now on the run for a series of brutal gangland murders, Richie Blacklance returns to the reservation to lay low, settle old feuds and to take his 12-year-old nephew, Albert, under his wing. Both the Littlechild and his new trainee must find this ruthless fugitive, whose return to their rural Indigenous reservation has exposed its darkest secrets and could ignite a violent gang war.

The story is written by Zach Montague, a police officer from Canada, who wrote the fictional story based on some of his actual experiences. The movie is produced by Ran Namrode, Angelica Adzic, Cole Payne, and Executive Producer Marcus RedThunder; and directed by Vincent Grashaw.

“I didn’t know much about Concho when I first reached out to Christine. I was just looking at the different tribes that surround Oklahoma City. When I reached out to Christine I had a really great conversation with her and she told me about the bison herd,” Payne, CEO Traverse Media, and one of the producers of ‘Keep Quiet,’ said. “I was like ‘guys we have to at least look at this bison herd,’ so we drove up there and saw the bison herd, we saw the reservation and then those murals on the walls we were like we have to film up here. Right away I told Christine we wanted to film up at Concho. Vincent Grashaw, the director, wrote a new scene specifically for the bison herd and we got to meet Kiefer, who was very curious.”

Payne said the crew had a great experience and felt the scenes filmed in Concho will add a lot to the film.

“Christine set up a blessing ceremony and that was really important for Lou. From the very beginning he said any of the tribes we are going to be working with he wanted to talk to them in advance and meet them in advance. The people were really fantastic. Honestly it was such a great experience,” Payne said.

Along with actors Lou Diamond Phillips and Tommy Schulz, other actors include Nick Stahl (Sin City, Terminator 3, Rise of the Machines), Elisha Pratt (Killers of the Flower Moon, True Detective), Lane Factor (Reservation Dogs, The Fabemans, Dana Namerode (The A-Frame, What Josiah Saw), and others.

“We are super lucky to have the local Native actors we have cast. Like Lane, Tommy Schulz, Elisha Pratt and several others. I think they saw the potential in the screenplay as well,” Payne said

The movie will be filmed entirely in Oklahoma and projected to be completed in a few months. From there the film will be submitted to film festivals, with their sights on submitting to the Sundance Film Festival next fall.

Becoming ‘Certified Film Friendly’

Riffel, project manager soon found out when they attended an infrastructure workshop in September 2022. One of the presenters at the workshop were representatives from the Oklahoma Film & Music office who said Oklahoma had an influx in the field of film production within the past few years and was expected to continue to increase.

“We learned there are several requirements to meet in order to be considered for future film production and to become “Certified Film Friendly.” Although all this information was shared, not enough interest was generated at that time, but we did set up a presentation with the Oklahoma Film & Music Office here in Concho,” Morton stated.

Fast forward to December 2023 Morton received a phone call from Payne requesting information about filming in different areas of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribal headquarters for a film. Payne had been referred to her from her contacts with Oklahoma Film & Music Office.

“We had a Zoom meeting with Cole Payne wherein the synopsis of the movie was presented; he shared with us photos of scenes they were looking for, the script of the movie and on Jan. 4 he (Payne) along with Vincent Grashaw, director, and three other crew members came to visit. Sam (Riffel) and I provided a tour of the Concho Campus. They were interested in the old school, the murals, the dilapidated housing, and prior arrangement were made with Randy Hawk for a buffalo tour. Kiefer the buffalo was on hand, he made quite an impression and we provided the story of Kiefer and how he came to be so tame,” Morton stated.

What’s next? Morton and Riffel said they will continue to get the tribes certified as “Film Friendly,” for future film/movie productions.

“The Tribes can identify, showcase and register various locations of our tribal land for future tv/film production. Example: buffalo herd, Ranch, open range, etc. Other things to think about:

New podcast delves into MMIW cases

Rosemary Stephens, Editor-in-Chief

Red Road Echoes podcast’s first episode in January opened with the case of Nevaeh Kingbird, Ojibwe, a 15 year old girl from Bemidji, Minnesota, who went missing on October 22, 2021. Her case is still open and unsolved.

Their second episode, ‘Secrets in the Lake,’ revolved around Olivia Lone Bear, who went missing on Oct. 4, 2017 from New Town, North Dakota. Her body was found nine months later on July 31, 2018, submerged beneath Lake Sakakawea. She was buckled into the passenger seat of the pick-up she was last seen driving. Her case is still open and unsolved.

The new podcast was created by Annette Nowlin and her brother Josh to bring awareness to the thousands of unsolved cases of missing and/or murdered Indigenous girls and women through the country.

“I have always been a huge true crime fan, but I told my husband I’ve noticed a serious lack of coverage for Indigenous people. I’m not sure why our people don’t get the coverage other people get, and it’s sad. So, my husband told me, ‘You should do it then. Why don’t you be the voice for your people?’ I am here today to do just that,” Nowlin stated in her opening podcast. “Join me in sharing a light and giving a voice to these victims.”

Listening and watching Red Road Echoes podcasts sent a chill through this viewer as the thoughts of what if this happened to my daughter, my mother, my sister, my auntie?

Missing and Murdered Indigenous women (MMIW) has grown into a nationwide epidemic, sparking laws and legislation to be enacted specifically addressing missing and murdered Indigenous people (MMIP).

According to statistics provided by the National Crime Information Center, in 2020, there were 5,295 reports of missing Indigenous women and girls. However, due to a lack of information gathering, these statistics sometimes represent a significant undercount of actual missing cases for Indigenous people. In August 2023 the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigations estimated there were 500 cases of missing or murdered Indigenous people in Oklahoma alone.

Congress has passed a few acts in recent years that offer more targeted support in addressing the MMIW crisis. Savanna’s Act was passed in 2020 and aims to improve coordination between law enforcement agencies in cases of missing or murdered indigenous persons. The act was named after 22-year-old Savanna Lafontaine-Greywind, a member of the Spirit Lake Nation, who was murdered while eight months pregnant. In 2021, the Not Invisible Act was passed, mandating the formation of a commission to investigate ways to reduce violent crimes against American Indians and Alaska Natives. Also in 2021, Secretary of the Interior Deb Haaland announced the formation of a Missing and Murdered Unit within the BIA that will help lead and coordinate federal investigations of MMIP cases.

Individual states have also passed MMIW legislation. In Oklahoma Ida’s Law was enacted in November 2021. The law was named after Cheyenne and Arapaho citizen Ida Beard who went missing in 2015. Beard, 29 at the time of her disappearance, lived with her mother in El Reno, Okla. On June 30, 2015, Beard told her mother she was going to go visit some friends and she never returned. Her case remains open and has not been solved.

Ida’s Law is intended improve coordination between law enforcement entities working on cases involving missing or murdered Indigenous people in Oklahoma, while also assigning a point person to work closely with the family members of victims.

Also in Oklahoma, the Kasey Alert system went into effect Nov. 1, 2023, an alert system for missing adults in Oklahoma between the ages of 18-59. It is named after Cherokee citizen Kasey Russell, who went missing at the age of 29 in McAlester, Okla., in 2016. It took six years for his family to learn anything about his disappearance and death.

MMIW and MMIP task forces have formed throughout the country to assist families in searching for their missing loved ones, navigate a complicated law enforcement system and supporting the family members throughout the pain wrenching process of looking for answers.

In an effort to bring awareness to missing and murdered Indigenous people epidemic, May 5 has been designated as MMIP Awareness Day. In a statement regarding MMIP Awareness Day, U.S. Attorney General Merrick Garland wrote, “The Justice Department is marshalling the full strength of its resources to confront the crisis of Missing or Murdered Indigenous Persons, which has devastated the lives of victims, their families, and entire Tribal communities. Addressing this crisis requires a whole-of-government approach, and we are grateful for the partnership of Tribal and other law enforcement agencies across the nation that are working alongside the Justice Department to help reduce crime and support victims in American Indian and Alaska Native communities.”

With so many open and unsolved cases, the podcast Red Road Echoes will serve as another tool to bring these cases back into the light and hopefully bring new tips for law enforcement and the families to pursue to bring their loved ones home.

Making a Plan: Addressing MMIP in Communities

By LaRenda Morgan

For generations the Cheyenne Arapaho people have experienced family members who have gone missing or murdered. The cases of tribal citizens nationwide have been a silent epidemic and families have suffered alone.

In 2023, Kasey’s Alert, named after Cherokee citizen Kasey Russell, was passed in Oklahoma to create an alert system for missing and at-risk persons. It will notify the public of missing persons ages 18-59 similar to the Amber and Silver Alert systems.

The OSBI, Bureau of Indian Affairs’ Dept. of Interior (DOI) and the U.S Attorney’s Office for the Western Dakota also modeled MMIP legislation after Ida’s Law and the State of Colorado also recently established an Office of Liaison for Missing and Murdered Indigenous Relatives to address cases.

District of Oklahoma (DOJ) now have Missing and Murdered Units to assist tribal citizens with their cases.

There are some important details you should know about reporting a missing or murdered case. While all these entities can work together with local law enforcement, reporting your case to one does not automatically report to all. Here are some tips to help you make a plan to report, address and bring awareness to your loved ones’ case.

Deputy Attorney General Antonio Church said with regard to prosecution, there are currently 50 to 75 criminal defendants every year that are prosecuted.

“When we’re working towards services or alternative methods of correcting these behaviors, that’s where probation officers and counselors become very essential and currently, I’m sure our probation officer is at 25 but that number increases or decreases depending on the year and the number of defendants that we’re having especially as we’re expanding our enrollment,” Church said.

The grant will award approximately up to $900,000 and will be performed for a duration of 60 months.

Next discussion was on a resolution to approve the Election Commission’s amended legal consultation service agreement.

As a year-to-year renewal contract for the legal representation for the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes Election Commission. No one was present from the Election Commission to introduce the item for discussion.

Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes Lt. Gov. Hershel Gorham questioned the mileage that was included in the contract pointing out there was no line item for mileage in the Election Commission budget.

“If you look at the election commission budget, I don’t see a line item for mileage so if he’s allowed, where’s it going to come from? Is it going to bill as part of his billable rate or come from the actual line item, which does not exist,” Lt. Gov. Gorham said.

Sleeper said for the next working session they would like to discuss the matter with the Election Commission to determine more details.

Next up was a resolution to appropriate funds for a tribal enrollment audit.

The resolution comes after the 2021 Constitutional Amendment passed in October 2021 regarding Article IV Membership in the Constitution, which states in Section 6, “Tribal Enrollment Auditing: The Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes shall perform a tribal enrollment audit employing an outside agency in order to establish a new, accurate, base roll to be conducted within one year.”

According to the resolution, the adoption of the Constitutional amendment is in the best interests of the tribes and the one-year window to perform an audit has expired.

Executive Director of Enrollment, Jerrie Oglesby said there are two proposals, one by Penn Ridge and the other by Creating Stronger Nations.

“Penn Ridge is going to be a little more expensive with their research into our files ... Creating Stronger Nations are the ones that proposed a 12-week plan to go over our files as opposed to Penn Ridge who is going to take 15 months to conduct audit on our files and it’s going to cost $338,500.00,” Oglesby said.

Oglesby said Penn Ridge was highly recommended by the BIA.

“There is an $88,000 difference between the two but there’s a lot of work involved in one of them as opposed to the other, one is going to put a little more work into it taking 15 months to perform the audit and the other is less costly which is Creating Stronger Nations,” Oglesby said.

During the discussion, there was conflicting views on the membership ordinance that is being followed to allow for disenrollment or individuals that aren’t eligible for enrollment. Sleeper halted the discussion to be continued in the next working session and discussed at the next public hearing.

The resolution to adopt the Cheyenne and Arapaho Defamation Act was written and introduced by Honia Jackson, associate general counsel within the Office of Tribal Attorney. She said Oklahoma already has a Defamation Act with most states having it in their common law. The issue is a lot of the laws, especially common laws are not accessible to tribal citizens.

“If a tribal citizen were to look up case law it’s very hard for them to do so ... the issue with the tribe is even though we do have case law, it’s not as easily accessible because for instance if you go to Westlaw, it’s outdated and hasn’t been updated in years. It’s harder for tribal citizens to get their hands on them as it pertains to Cheyenne Arapaho cases, so it makes it easier when we have a code that breaks down all the laws,” Jackson said.

She mentioned they are trying to update all the codes and get them into one place such as the website, not just the Defamation Act but they are wanting guardianship codes and civil procedures on there as well for tribal citizens to access.

“It just makes it easier for tribal citizens to read and understand. There are no elements that are included that are different than any other Defamation Act, and I know there was concerns about the government surpassing the tribal citizens, I understand it, but by law the government, state, tribal, federal they’re not allowed to sue for defamation,” Jackson said.

She said that while governments themselves, (state, federal, or tribal) cannot sue, if it’s an individual, such as a legislator, they can’t have the legislative branch sue but they can sue as an individual. But because they are a public official, it will be much harder for them to actually prove defamation. They would have to prove actual malice or that a statement was knowingly or recklessly made.

“Regardless if we had a Defamation Act or not, we can already go ahead and sue for defamation we would just use the state law and not tribal law, they just want to have everything in one spot for citizens to access.”

Jackson confirmed the act is for individual tribal citizens and the goal is to get acts written down for tribal citizens to access for themselves.

“For instance, one of the things that are upcoming is the guardianship code so that way they would know the process and then hopefully once we get most of these drafted we’re trying to get them on the website so that people can have them, the tribal citizens can have them for when they’re trying to get a guardianship or they’re trying to pursue litigation, but it’s basically about individual tribal citizens,” Jackson said.

According to Cornell Law School Legal Information Institute, defamation is a statement that injures a third party’s reputation. The tort of defamation includes both libel (written statements) and slander (spoken statements). State common law and statutory law governs defamation actions, and each state varies in their standards for defamation and potential damages. Defamation is a tricky area of law as the lines between stating an opinion versus a fact can be vague, and defamation tests the limits of the first amendment freedoms of speech and press.

To prove defamation, a plaintiff must show four things: 1) a false statement purporting to be fact; 2) publication or communication of that statement to a third person; 3) fault amounting to at least negligence; and 4) damages, or some harm caused to the reputation of the person or entity who is the subject of the statement.

Next item discussed was a resolution to amend the Codification Act.

According to the resolution, the Seventh Legislature had passed resolution 7L-RS-2019-04-003 which established an organized Law and Order Code, organized in a logical manner and allows for a system of codification.

The amendment to the Codification Act is to update and account for recent controlling documents of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes.

In attempting to amend the codification act, Jackson said a few of the acts were not in the original codification act.

“There’s other ones in which have been drafted but the names are different, for instance, the zoning one, there’s a zoning ordinance that is being drafted in this point and time, but the title is going to be a little different than what it was originally and then there are some that have already been drafted but we just didn’t include it initially,” Jackson said.

Gorham said he wanted to clarify that the reserved placeholders in the act are just ideals and not in concrete.

“Ultimately, the legislature would have to approve any enactment to these reserve place holders and the executive branch, our office, we can draft something and submit it to you all but you all are the only ones that can pass it, if there are some reserved placeholders on here that you all do not like or agree with those can be removed from the codification act,” Gorham said.

The last item discussed was a resolution to authorize Gov. Reggie Wassana to negotiate and execute cross-deputation agreements with certain law enforcement agencies located within constitutional boundaries detailed in Article VI, Section 2(b) of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Constitution.

Church presented the item and said the cross deputation is something that has been discussed with past legislators, past attorney generals and Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA). Church said it’s an appropriate time for cross deputation as there is an increase in incidences where law enforcement, either state, federal or BIA are running into jurisdictional questions.

“What this does is it allows them, that law enforcement officer, to have legal protection to enforce tribal law within the constitutional boundaries of the tribes,” Church said.

Church said there will be requirements in order to fully become cross deputized as they will have to take a test to show certain awareness and applicability of tribal law.

“It allows our BIA officers to not be the only law enforcement agency or law enforcement body that can enforce tribal law, which decreases the response times, and also allows for actions being taken where there is a question of jurisdiction. The only state officers that have gone through the federal program and take the test and get deputized by BIA, would actually be able to effectuate the tribal law,” Church said.

Ruiz raised concern for the resolution as there have been instances where there is distrust between the sheriff deputies and tribal citizens.

“It really gives a lot of distress to individuals when we sign something like this, or should we vote to pass this because it’s basically opening up a lot of uncertainty. We did talk about this in the past and we voted it down before but just reading what we have it doesn’t look different from the old one that was presented to us, but I just feel that there has to be a little bit more work done before we can just say we’re going to go forward,” Ruiz said.

To address his concerns, Church said the resolution is just a template and certain requirements can be included.

“If we wanted to require for example, tribal sensitivity or awareness or certain requirements on when and where that officer can go onto a tribal property those are all certainly welcome to be included in the agreement and I would actually encourage the legislators if they have specific concerns to be addressed by these agreements please let us know and we can include that,” Church said.

This agenda will be voted on during the second regular session of the 10th Legislature at 9 a.m., Saturday Feb. 10 in the large conference room located within the Dept. of Administration building in Concho, Okla.

The first regular session of the 10th Legislature held Jan. 13, the legislature appointed A2 Legislator Kendricks Sleeper as the new Speaker of the Legislature, and A4 Legislator Rector Candy as the new Assistant Speaker of the Legislature. There was only one resolution brought to the table for a vote, Resolution 10L-RS-2024-01-0005, A Tribal Council Resolution to Support and Re-Establish Traditional Cultural & Ceremonial Homelands in the state of Colorado. The resolution was unanimously approved by all eight legislators.

Finding a path to language revitalization

This article first published in the Fort Lewis College student newsletter

Chaz Meadows becomes first generation to graduate college at Fort Lewis College in Durango, Colo.

When he graduated high school in 2019, Chaz Meadows hadn't considered college a possibility. He dove into work in Oklahoma's oil fields, but a spur of the moment decision altered his life's course.

"I didn't even know that I was gonna go to college, that was just something I decided last minute. I applied and got in. Honestly, I didn't think I was going to get into college," Meadows said.

As the first in his family to step into higher education, Meadows faced early hurdles, not being familiar with the process of higher education.

"I didn't know anything about college or getting scholarships, being ready for class, registering and all the academic language. That was new to me," he said.

Adapting to college life posed challenges, especially far from the family he typically turned to for help and guidance.

"None of my family went to college, some of them didn't even graduate high school, so I really just had to own up to it as a young man and as a person to say I'm going to graduate no matter what," Meadows said.

He attributes his success to three Fort Lewis College professors, Keri Brandt-Off, Dr. Majel Boxer and Dr. Deanne Grant, who provided him with unwavering support.

"When I'd go to them and tell them how I was feeling, they would keep me holding on. They told me, 'We want you to graduate whatever it takes,' and that really pushed me," he said.

Encouraged by these professors, Meadows pursued a double major in Native American and Indigenous Studies and Sociology.

"Keri Brandt-Off impacted my life in lots of different ways. She was my counselor, advisor and somebody I could lean on and depend on. Deanne Grant showed me how to bridge my Native American Studies major and Sociology major to connect them and to see them jointly, instead of separate, because they do go together. And she was also a really good mentor that I had all throughout my four years at Fort Lewis," Meadows said.

Dr. Grant said Meadows was a great example of one of the stellar Native students attending Fort Lewis.

"He has a curious mind, a strong worth ethic, all while remaining culturally grounded and rooted. I have no doubts he'll accomplish his goals in life and am excited to see all the things he'll do to help his people and the field of Native American Indigenous Studies."

It was Dr. Boxer was the professor who sparked his interest in language revitalization, unveiling a path to potential careers.

"She taught me about the issues facing Indigenous communities and how we can start to look forward, making opportunities to resolve them. And one of them was language revitalization. I mentioned it to her and she told me that it's possible that I could do that and make a career out of it. That's what really pushed me to come back to my tribe and learn my language," Meadows said.

This passion for language revitalization led him to become an All Our Kin Fellow and to intern with the Language and Cultural preservation office for the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes. These experiences clarified his post-graduation goals.

Meadows secured a full-time position as a Language Apprentice with hopes of pursuing a Master's in Native American and Indigenous Studies. He received an acceptance letter to the University of Oklahoma for a Master of Arts in Native American Studies in December 2023.

Revitalizing the language among younger tribal members is just one facet of Meadows' commitment to his community. He aims to be an example, demonstrating success in college.

"I'm trying to set the example of somebody that they could look up to. And that's all I ever wanted to do. I push myself to be in a place where not only to my tribal nation, but the people that I surround myself with, I can be a better influence on them. That's what really pushed me because I didn't make straight As in high school ... I didn't really have the best grades at all," Meadows said. "I'm doing something that I really love, something I want to wrap my life around. Our language is becoming endangered, it's in the sever stages of extinction. So I'm helping in the bigger goal of revitalizing language within the younger generation of people."

Meadows graduated Fort Lewis College in December 2023 and is already preparing for the next generation of Fort Lewis College students. His first child was born in December and he hopes one day his son will follow in his footsteps as a Skyhawk.

"I want my kids to go there because that's where I went to school, you know? It's something I'm really proud of myself for doing. I'm proud of everybody that had a hand in making this happen for me," he said.

Meadows has left a lasting impression with Dr. Brandt-Off and she sees him continuing to make an impact post-graduation.

"Chaz is exceptional in every way and working with him has been a complete joy. He is bright and imaginative, kind and compassionate, and has the skills to create new possibilities for a better world."

are steps to reporting. First determine if your family or friend is really missing. Check the person’s home, ask local law enforcement to do a “welfare check.” Sometimes if a person is in the hospital, the hospital will not give out information due to HIPAA. A law enforcement officer may be able to get the information. You should also check with coworkers, friends and county or city jails or coroner’s office.

If your loved one is not located, file a missing person’s report with law enforcement. Due to jurisdictional issues with overlapping tribal and state, county, city boundaries, it is advisable to file report with local law enforcement and Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) Missing and Murdered Unit or simply call BIA dispatch and an officer will do an intake. You may also report the case to the OSBI Office of Liaison for MMIP and U.S Attorney’s office for the Western District of Oklahoma. Make sure you have all and any details relevant to your loved one, including physical description, address, vehicle information and social media pages frequented and cell phone number and last known whereabouts.

Next, you may contact the National Missing and Unidentified Persons System (NamUS). This is a system operated by the U.S. Department of Justice that allows you to upload information about a missing person into a database for use by law enforcement and the public. If a minor is missing, you can contact the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children or the Polly Klass Foundation. You can also use the FBI’s National Crime Information Center (NCIC) for more information. Make sure you know your loved ones’ details such as eye, hair color, height, weight, last known items of clothing, or any identifying marks such as tattoos or birthmarks. Please upload a recent photo.

Once you have filed the report and entered information into the NAMUS website, you can reach out to media outlets. You can send a photo and missing person information to tribal, local TV, radio or newspapers and share on social media.

Once you share your loved ones missing person case or murdered case online or with the community, please be aware of private investigators. Make sure they are legitimate. Any private investigator you hire should be certified and willing to work with the detective or law enforcement on your loved ones’ case. Families can be targeted during this vulnerable time.

Families whose family members have been murdered can also make sure tribal, DOJ or OSBI law enforcement is aware of your case. If your case is being handled by local law enforcement, BIA-MMU can monitor the investigation or help liaison for you in communicating with case detectives. You must contact them and request their assistance. There is an intake process where an officer will take all your information and provide you with information on what they can assist with. BIA, DOJ and OSBI can work together and review cases, but they are separate agencies, and you may have to contact each one individually.

Also, it is common for detectives or the medical examiner’s office to request a DNA sample from an immediate family member. This is important in checking unidentified remains that may be in the coroners or medical examiner’s office. Your DNA will not be used for any other purpose other than searching for a DNA match.

During this difficult time period in dealing with missing or murdered loved ones’ cases, family members may experience grief or anger, high variance of psychological distress which may include behavioral health issues, suicidal thoughts, substance abuse, domestic violence, or stress related illnesses.

Please reach out to your healthcare provider or Indian Health Service medical provider to help you cope with your distress. They can provide you with medical treatment and/or refer you to resources for counseling. For emotional support you may reach out to your friends, tribal behavioral health, suicide prevention and local MMIP chapter for support.

Lastly, take care of yourself. Eat healthy meals which includes greens, salads, fruits, nuts, yogurts, protein and plenty of water. Take walks or exercise and keep movement in your daily routine. Also take time to pray or meditate to calm your spirit. It is okay to cry and feel your emotions. It is healthy to cry and tears help release stress. Get plenty of rest. It may seem like you can’t rest, but you should give yourself plenty of time to sleep so that you can maintain your health for yourself, your family and your loved one. Please remember you can join tribal wellness programs for physical activities or call the Indian Health Service nutritionist to assist you with guidance on a healthy diet.

If your missing or murdered loved one was the main financial provider, and you are in tribal jurisdiction, the Cheyenne Arapaho Tribes has a HOPE program, Social Services program and Food Pantry to assist.

Remember, if you know of any information regarding a missing and murdered case, you can report anonymously to BIA-Missing and Murdered Unit and to local law enforcement. If you know of someone being kidnapped, a human trafficking victim, physically harmed or sexually assaulted/abused please call 9-1-1 and report, you may also remain anonymous. You could save someone’s life by taking action.

It will take our whole tribe and community to make a change and protect our people. It is okay to talk about your MMIP loved one and remember them. Tell their story. It could help bring them home or justice to their case and healing to the family in due time.

Everyone can be an advocate!

es regardless of where they live, requiring only that they move within their specific legislative district after winning election;

- Created an at-large legislative district, requiring that candidates live outside of any legislative district.

Thursday's low turnout doomed the proposals, underscoring concerns about voter participation that some tribal leaders sought to address by broadening candidate eligibility requirements. It's also unclear how robustly tribal citizens were aware of Thursday's election.

Beyond ballots being mailed to all registered voters, the only other notice most voters received was an article in the Tribal Tribune published in both December editions of the paper and a vague "vote yes" ad in first edition of the new year.

"The proposal needed more information and maybe people didn't understand it totally," Gov. Reggie Wassana said. "The authors of the resolutions put it up for a vote through passage at the annual Tribal Council meeting. The low turnout may have been (due) to the lack of clarity that most had questions with."

Wassana also pointed to other issues with the proposals, such as only one at-large district being proposed instead of two. All other legislative districts for the tribes have two representatives: one Cheyenne and one Arapaho. Some voters may also have been concerned with allowing out-of-district candidates file for office.

Tribal Council set proposals for special election Proposed amendments

one through three were passed by the Tribal Council on Oct. 7, and the Cheyenne and Arapaho Election Commission scheduled a special election to approve or reject the constitutional amendments for Thursday.

The Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes' Tribal Council is not the legislative branch of the tribes' government. Under the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes' constitution, the government is divided into four branches: the Tribal Council, the legislative, the executive and the judiciary.

The Tribal Council consists of every member of the tribe over 18 years old, and whoever attends its meetings can vote. It meets annually on the first Saturday of October, and 75 citizens are required for a quorum. The number of eligible members of the Tribal Council was expanded in 2021 when tribal citizens voted to lower the blood quantum requirement for citizenship from one-fourth to one-eighth.

Tribe elected legislators, election commissioners in November

Between last year's October Tribal Council meeting and Thursday's special election, Cheyenne and Arapaho citizens elected four tribal legislators and four election commissioners.

Two incumbents for the election commission were reelected without an opponent: Norma Yarbrough, representing Cheyenne District 2, and Sarah Orange, representing Cheyenne District 4.

Arapaho District 1 Election Commissioner Ray Mosqueda won reelection with 61.43 percent of the

ATHLETES' SPOTLIGHT

Latoya Lonelodge, Senior Reporter

Alex Elizondo, El Reno High School

(EL RENO, OK) As a point guard looking to make his next move, Alex Elizondo, 17, hopes to make an impactful statement this basketball season. Elizondo thrives on building connections and making memories on and off the basketball court in his junior year of high school.

Standing 6'0 tall, Elizondo plays point guard for the El Reno Indians High School basketball team.

Born in Tulsa, Okla., and raised in El Reno, Okla., Elizondo was introduced to the game of basketball at an early age by his father.

“I was in kindergarten and introduced by my dad, I know my parents’ played basketball when they were my age as well, my dad just kind of threw us in there and I loved it ever since and made a lot of memories,” Elizondo said.

Elizondo said what he loves the most about basketball is the connections he’s made and continues to make.

“I would say building connections from people around you, I’m an unselfish player but I like to get the assists and also love to score when it’s needed,” Elizondo said.

And his motivation for playing, Elizondo said comes from the support of his family.

“There’s always someone from my family that always comes to watch me, and I always feel my best with them, to play for them because there’s always someone to come watch me,” Elizondo said.

Alongside his goals for the season, Elizondo said what he looks forward to the most this season is going back to the state championship. In the previous season, the El Reno Indians fell short during the state quarter finals.

In preparing, Elizondo said his goals are to work on being a better ball handler, a better scorer and a better assister.

“I always work on my ball handling it’s a must for a point guard and I always work on my mid-range jumpers, my free throws, my three pointers and I always work on finishing at the rim,” Elizondo said.

Wanting to take his game to the next level, Elizondo practices beyond his normal basketball practice hours after school.

“I stay another hour and a half after practice getting shots up and dribbling and if we don’t have practice, I just try to get in the gym everyday even when we don’t have practice, I go for three hours sometimes I’ll be by myself, or just me and my sister,” Elizondo said.

Elizondo’s sister Emmarry also plays for the El Reno Lady Indians basketball team.

With a 3.5 GPA, Elizondo continues to maintain his grades by doing his work in the classroom before playing basketball.

“I just try to do my work in class because I practice in the evening and I’m always tired after I get home, so I always try to do my best to get my work done in class,” Elizondo said.

Striving to always do his best on and off the court, Elizondo is always looking to improve his game. And Elizondo said the only way to do that is by practicing every day.

“You have to be practicing every day going hard, working a sweat because no one’s going to do it for you, it has to be yourself, no one can want it for you,” Elizondo said.

With years of playing experience, Elizondo said basketball has taught him that it can also be enjoyable making connections and building relationships from the sport.

“It’s taught me that it’s fun, you can also build connections with your teammates and coaches as well, lifelong connections through basketball,” Elizondo said.

Through basketball, Elizondo said what he hopes to accomplish the most is being a better teammate and to hopefully play at the next level.

“I would want to be remembered as a good teammate to my teammates and a player that someone can look up to and also to be a leader on the court,” Elizondo said.

Overall, Elizondo said basketball has been able to give him the extra push that he needs.

“Basketball makes me feel good, I always have the want and the will to win, it’s like my extra push, the fire to win and always wanting to push myself,” Elizondo said.

El Reno Boys Basketball Head Coach, Rodney Haydon said Elizondo is a leader on the team.

“Alex is an extremely special player and student for us, Alex started every game as a sophomore and has started every game as a junior to this point, he is an extremely hard worker and leads this team by his actions in practice and in games, ironically this weekend he was voted to the all-tournament team at the Shawnee tournament,” Haydon said.

So far in the season, Elizondo is averaging 9.1 points per game and shooting 80 percent from the free throw line. He has 56 assists on the year as well as 23 steals and leads the team in charges with eight.

Elizondo will graduate in the spring of 2025. Although he has no definite plans as of now, he hopes to continue his education in college and play basketball at the next level.

Alex’s parents are Jeffery Elizondo Sr., and Teranne Spotted Bear. His paternal grandparents are Michael Elizondo Sr., and Lou Ann Chouteau. His maternal grandparents are Tracey Moore and Print Spotted Bear. Alex’s siblings are Emmarry, Jeffery, Skylar Elizondo and Elyza Spotted Bear.

vote, defeating Kennesha Willis (38.57 percent) in the November election. In Arapaho’s District 2, Kelly Loneman won 63.64 percent of the vote to unseat incumbent Dale Hamilton Jr., who garnered 36.36 percent support.

In the four legislative elections, all three incumbents who ran were reelected:

- Travis Ruiz (Arapaho District 3) won 54.29 percent of the vote, while Alfred Whiteshirt garnered 45.71 percent;
- Rector Candy (Arapaho District 4) won 55.56 percent of the vote, while Reva Wassana garnered 44.44 percent;
- Bruce Whiteman Jr. (Cheyenne District 1) won 60.32 percent of the vote, while Wilma Blackbear garnered 39.68 percent.

In the open Cheyenne District 3, Thomas Trout was elected to a first term in the Legislature with 54.73 percent of the vote, to Charlene Wassana’s 45.27 percent.

Death of Lt. Gov. Miles leads to appointment of Hershel Gorham

The position of Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes lieutenant governor became vacant after the Sept. 4 death of Lt. Gov. Gilbert LaMott Miles. He was first elected as lieutenant governor in 2017 and reelected in 2021. He was the first Cheyenne and Arapaho lieutenant governor to serve two consecutive terms after the passage of the 2006 constitution. Before constitutional amendments were made in 2006, the nation was overseen by a business committee.

Gov. Reggie Wassana appointed his general counsel, Hershel Gorham, to complete the rest of Miles’ term, which expires in 2025. Gorham had served as general counsel since January 2018. He also serves as ex-officio director of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Community Development Corporation.

Gorham and the newly elected officials were sworn in during a ceremony Jan. 6.

Formal reservation disestablished, but informal reservation growing

While the landmark decision in McGirt v. Oklahoma found the Muscogee Nation Reservation was never disestablished and later decisions have upheld the reservation status of several tribes in eastern Oklahoma, tribes in western Oklahoma have been less successful in having their historic reservations recognized. In December 2022, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals held that the Cheyenne-Arapaho Reservation was disestablished by Congress in 1891.

The disestablishment and allotment of the reservation predates Oklahoma statehood and highlights the different histories of tribes in Oklahoma Territory and Indian Territory. On April 19, 1892, the Cheyenne and Arapaho Reservation was opened for settlers in Oklahoma’s third land run after a presidential proclamation by President Benjamin Harrison.

However, the disestablishment of a formal reservation did not entirely eliminate the tribe’s authority and jurisdiction. As highlighted in the oral arguments for the Stroble v. Oklahoma Tax Commission case, reservations can be “formal” or “informal.” Informal reservations are lands held in trust by the federal government for the benefit of a tribe.

Trust lands expand authority of western Oklahoma tribe

Over the past few years, the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes have expanded their informal reservation by putting more land into “trust status,” a process which requires approval from the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs. Recently President Joe Biden signed an executive order that includes efforts to streamline the process for placing land into trust for tribes.

Since 2020, three properties under the jurisdiction of the tribe have been given trust status. Before that, Wassana told the Tribal Tribune that “research going back over 40 years has shown that the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes have never successfully placed one single acre of land into trust status.”

In June 2020, the tribe successfully placed a half-acre plot of land including the Geary Community Center into trust status. In January 2022, a 6.8-acre plot of land south of Geary, known informally as “Rodeo Joes tract,” was also granted trust status.

In November 2023, the tribe successfully petitioned to place a 79-acre tract of land in Woodward into trust status. The land acquisition increased the territorial jurisdiction of the tribe by more than tenfold, and it could pave the way for casino gaming developments in the area.

While no plans for the 79-acres put into trust have been officially announced, the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribal Tribune reported that Wassana indicated it would be used for economic development.

“Hopefully, we can offer tourists or travelers in that northwest quadrant a place maybe to shop, entertain, get gas, have an overnight stay and those types of things we can develop there just outside of Woodward,” Wassana said.

Wassana has also pushed for the return of lands making up Fort

Reno, currently held by the federal government. The dispute over the lands in question is decades old and involves over 9,000 acres under the control of the U.S. Department of Agriculture since 1947. The fort operated as a military base between 1874 and 1947, and numerous efforts by the tribes to reclaim the land have failed, including contentious negotiations in the 1990s involving a proposed U.S. military graveyard and the subsequent placement of bison research facilities at the USDA site, an action viewed by some as retaliatory.

Moving land into trust allows a tribe to exercise more control over the land, including granting criminal jurisdiction for crimes committed by Native Americans and granting some immunity from state taxation. Trust lands are sometimes called “informal reservations” since they possess the same legal status — Indian Country — as formal reservations.

“I feel confident in stating that tribal gaming has a positive impact on preventing human trafficking,” Hovland said.

While there isn’t anything inherent to tribal casinos that make them susceptible to human trafficking, Hovland said complex jurisdictional issues in tribal communities bring challenges for combating all types of criminal activities.

“Thankfully, the 2022 Reauthorization of Violence Against Women Act recognizes special criminal jurisdiction of tribal courts to cover non-Native perpetrators of sexual assault and sex trafficking,” Hovland said.

With more than 500 tribal casinos on Indian land operated by nearly 250 tribes in 29 states, Hovland said there’s a need to be proactive to prevent potential crimes before they occur.

“It is reasonable to assume all operations could be affected by human trafficking, so we encourage tribes to increase awareness of these crimes and how to report them in order to stay vigilant in protecting our communities,” Hovland said.

Hovland said the training webinar had over 400 individuals in attendance who represented 114 gaming tribes and based on the survey information provided by those in attendance, the training received a 92% favorable rating.

“The NIGC hopes by better preparing tribal gaming employees and operators to identify potential human trafficking incidents, facilities are less vulnerable to human trafficking and the surrounding communities are safer, we remain committed to our collaboration with tribes, our federal partners, and non-governmental organizations to help end human trafficking,” Hovland said.

In being aware and knowing the signs to look for with human trafficking, it has become imminent in tribal gaming facilities to always be vigilant.

The Lucky Star Casino locations are actively staying up to date with ongoing efforts to prevent human trafficking on casino properties.

Deputy Director of Security for Lucky Star Casino, Jack Fisher said human trafficking is one of the biggest problems any casino can face, and awareness is key.

“A lot of people just aren’t aware of human trafficking and then the ones that see it on TV or something like that, they really just ignore it and so they probably don’t recognize it when it’s right in front of them,” Fisher said.

Fisher said with the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes and Lucky Star Casinos, he hasn’t seen any evidence of human trafficking within the jurisdictions, however that doesn’t mean it isn’t happening.

Fisher said in the event human trafficking is recognized, their protocols involve communicating with local Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) officers.

“We gather all the factual information that we could, anything of any material value and provide it for BIA and then BIA will investigate,” Fisher said.

Fisher said BIA along with the Oklahoma Bureau of Narcotics are currently working on creating a separate division or entity to combat human trafficking.

“They’ve been in contact with us and as soon as they get their procedures in line, they’re going to get back with us and then we can go from there and try to get some protocol going, but for now we just report it to BIA, provide them with all the information that we could and then they would take over the investigation at that point,” Fisher said.

Lucky Star Casinos have six locations throughout western Oklahoma. Out of the six, Fisher said security management is more precocious with the Watonga casino and hotel property.

“Any hotel within any casino atmosphere could have that issue for sure but our guys there, they’ve been given information to look for so if they recognize it, they can at least gather evidence and factual information and notify BIA, Watonga casino out of all six locations would probably be the most likely to recognize human trafficking as far as sexual human trafficking,” Fisher said.

Protocols and procedures regarding human trafficking at the Lucky Star Casinos follow the same guidelines for all locations. General Manager for Lucky Star Casino-Concho, Joshua Mansfield said human trafficking is a chief concern among Lucky Star Casino and the Native communities.

“As we head into 2024 our team is expanding our employee training program for a wide number of topics, among those is a strong focus on human and sex trafficking that goes beyond our security and surveillance teams and will help prepare all of our team members to be more capable in helping identify and deter human trafficking on our properties,” Mansfield said.

At Lucky Star casinos, security and surveillance teams are trained in incident reporting and response and are aware of certain indicators of human trafficking, such as signs of physical abuse, style of dress and certain interactions with other guests.

“Casinos can be a hot spot for those in the trafficking trade, especially during the holiday season and our teams always have to be mindful of the intentions of those visiting our casinos and c-stores, our security officers are trained to observe and report any evidence of illegal activity on our property,” Mansfield said.

Other tribally owned casinos in communities outside of Cheyenne and Arapaho territory are also taking initiatives to prevent human trafficking.

River Spirit Casino, based out of Tulsa, Okla., has been open for six years and prior to opening, River Spirit Casino Gaming Operation General Manager, Jerry Floyd said the casino wanted their team to be educated on what to do regarding human trafficking.

“Oklahoma is the crossroads of our United States with several major highways passing through, trafficking is possible anywhere and is not restricted to a metropolitan area,” Floyd said.

Floyd said identifying the signs of a victim is the first step in prevention. Some examples include identifying if the person is fearful, timid or submissive, questioning whether the person appears to be coached on what to say or noticing if the person has freedom of movement.

“Should they exhibit signs of victimization we contact law enforcement, at no time do we attempt to confront a trafficker or alert them of our suspicions,” Floyd said.

At River Spirit, Floyd said they have utilized the NIGC training sessions as they are offered along with e-learning courses as refreshers for their team members. They have also worked with the Demand Project to hold training sessions on combating human trafficking.

“The Muscogee Nation has invested heavily in our casino resort, we offer amenities that are comparable to any upscale casino resort destination in the world and we pride our ourselves in consistently training and retraining our teams to maintain the high standards we have established in guest comfort and safety,” Floyd said.

In continuing the ongoing efforts on combating human trafficking, Floyd said it has become a high priority among their casino and resort. The casino management wants team members to know what to look for and know how to react if they identify possible victims.

“See. Call. Save. If you see the signs of victimization or exploitation call law enforcement and save a life,” Floyd said.

and ecologically,”

Bryan Newland, assistant secretary for Indian Affairs said in a statement. “These investments from the President’s Investing in America agenda support our efforts to revitalize Tribal cultures and communities and help conserve and restore important ecosystems that benefit all Americans.”

The funds stem from roughly $2 billion aimed at climate resilience and restoration measures created first by the Bipartisan Infrastructure Act of 2021, and later the Inflation Reduction Act of 2022. The initiative follows similar efforts by the USDA to support bison reintroduction efforts, after the latter agency launched a pilot program aimed at supporting Tribal bison producers and then purchasing their stock for Native food distribution food programs.

The BIA announcement states that bison reintroduction can enhance soil development, restore native plants and wildlife to affected areas, and promote carbon sequestration - a common concern and potential revenue driver for Native environmental projects in recent years, per prior Tribal Business News reporting. Previous TBN stories have also pointed to economic opportunities and cultural renewals as important effects of bison herd restoration.

In Loving Memory of My Son Shannon 'Lil Duke' Blackwolf

In Memory of my Son Shannon "Lil Duke" Blackwolf, marks the 17 years since you left this place, called Mother Earth. I remember the day you left us like it was yesterday, the day I got the kind of news a Mother never wants to hear. I was on my way out the door to go meet up with Aunt Gil Teresa Bear @ Reno Bingo her and Rose Lobough, her Bingo Partner. When your Dad And your Sister Kelly (Factor) and her daughter my niece Kandace show up unexpectedly, you know something isn't right. The news that they brought was devastating to say the least. My Precious Boy was gone no longer here to walk this earth, You were only 24 years young, with 2 young children. Which your daughter has joined you going on six years now. A part of Parent dies when their child that they have given life is taken unexpectedly. Your world stops but the world keeps turning because it stops for no one. I want you son to know that your Precious Soul may have departed this earth, but your Spirit lives on.

We don't have all the answers of what happened and if it were met for us to know we would know, but sometimes the Creator spares us the specifics and the details. Your time here was brief and I know Son you wouldn't want us to go on in agony of the what if's. All I know Son is that you were a blessing and are still here in the midst holding us all up, through all of lives Trials and Tribulations of this life. I am thankful God blessed us with your Presences your love and your caring heart. I know Daddy was happy to see his Grandson and your sweet Baby Keira again. You are loved and Missed and Always Remembered Everyday. Love Your Mom, Dad,, Rachel, Joe, Kevin, Jarrod, Derrick, Melinda, and Your Son Rumel. Also Chas and Niyah and all the beautiful babies. Rest in Peace Son Shannon "Lil Duke" Blackwolf 12/26/82-1/23/07
