INVESTING IN SAFE, HEALTHY, & HOPEFUL COMMUNITIES BY THE NUMBERS

A phrase that is universal regardless of economic situation is "do you have the money for that?" The accompanying phrase is "do we have the money for that?" The common phrase to answer the first two questions is "we don't have the money." In October of 2021, at a critical time in our country, we introduced the first part of our Guide to Investing in Safe, Healthy & Hopeful Communities.

In part one to A Guide to Investing in Safe, Healthy, and Hopeful Communities, we shared how cities can address institutional barriers by investing their American Rescue Plan dollars and other government funding into comprehensive and solution-based efforts toward gun violence prevention. Throughout this guide, we outlined Solutions in Practice and Opportunities to Invest in People-Centered Budgeting, Government Entities focused on Gun Violence Prevention, Safe, Quality and Affordable Housing, Guaranteed Income, Employment and Business Development, and Incarceration Alternatives.

Closing in on yet another heavy year in 2021, the charge for reimagining public safety is more important than ever. We introduced change through model practices and policies that are essential to addressing the systemic causes to violence. With conversations on and offline, city by city, and person to person, the common thread to all solutions is funding. Great visions require the resources for it to land on the ground and make it tangible.

Funding for policy and programs come from a variety of sources from tax revenue, business investments, philanthropy, and from donations. Traditionally, Black communities are left out of the process until the very end of the budget cycle. Lack of input from Black communities on resources contributes to more harm than good. The key to quality and impactful funding is bringing all sectors of the city including the people most affected to the decision making table.

Early In 2021, a team of Black and Brown leaders in the community violence intervention ecosystem, campaigned for the Biden administration to add $5,000,000 for proven community based practices to the federal budget. The members of FundPeace created a nationwide campaign made up of young leaders, community partners, policy advocates, and parents to influence the White House's commitment to invest in community based and supported public safety strategies. The American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) is a $1.9 trillion pandemic-relief bill signed into law by President Biden in March 2021. To combat the downfalls of the COVID vaccine, this funding would be dedicated for improving the infrastructure for cities across the country. In this pivotal moment, specific investment towards historically underfunded communities can lead us to true public safety. As St. Louis Mayor Tishaura Jones said about reimagining something new with ARP funding, we need "bold, new solutions to fix decades' old problems."

This guide will display investments by the numbers with several cities that will hopefully give other cities examples to learn from as they identify fund allocations in 2022. This Guide will include investments by:

- Annual City Budgets (does not include ARP funding)
- Proposed allocation of ARP funding
- Incarceration
- Incarceration Alternatives
- Affordable housing
- Violence reduction funding
