Top EthiopianKonjo Ethiopian Food

Fetien Gebre-Michael and Yoseph Assefa are getting Denverites hooked on the cuisine of their homeland. The company started as a catering business in 2014 and expanded to a food truck a year later, but Konjo began reaching its largest audience in 2019 when it debuted a stall at Edgewater Public Market—and promptly spawned cravings for spongy injera, stir-fried chicken, lamb, and beef, and vegan sides. Tempted to join the newfound fans but a little intimidated by how to dig in? No worries: We asked Gebre-Michael to give us a primer on some of Konjo's most popular offerings. Rule number one? "Your utensils are your hands," says Gebre-Michael, whose family emigrated from Ethiopia to Colorado when she was three years old. "Traditionally, you eat with your right one." —Patricia Kaowatbumrong
