

6 Reasons to Take Your Cat To The Vet

83% of cats pay a visit to the veterinarian before their first birthday, but over 50% don't return until they become sick or are in pain. Read why it is important to schedule regular check-ups for your furry friend.

1. Cats age rapidly

A cat reaches the human age of 15 during its first year, and 24 by its second year. Each year after your cat ages 4 "cat years" for every calendar year.

2. Cats are masters of hiding illness and pain

Your cat could be developing a health condition long before you notice anything is wrong. Vets are trained to spot and detect these problems.

3. Subtle changes could mean big problems

Changes in your cat's eating patterns, weight, bowel movement or activity level can often be hard to notice. Make a list of information, concerns or questions and bring it to your veterinarian.

4. Your cat might be overweight

Over 50% of cats are overweight or obese. Your veterinarian will check Fifi's or Felix' weight and provide recommendations to help keep her/him at their ideal weight.

5. Prevention is better than cure

Regular exams can help avoid medical emergencies since veterinarians can often detect conditions or disease that may affect your cat's health long before they become significantly painful or more costly to treat. Also, veterinary science is developing continuously and your vet can keep you up-to-date about new therapies or clinical studies.

6. Say Cheese

Periodontal disease is considered the most prevalent disease in furry friends three years of age and older.

It may lead to infections, loss of appetite and pain. So, you can see the check-up as going to a GP and a dentist in one visit!
