

Cohort Leader for Wayfinders Pilot Residency Program

Employer

Commonweal / ILALI

Location

Onsite at the Whidbey Institute on Whidbey Island, Clinton, WA

Term

Seasonal/short-term: December, 2022 - April, 2023, with residency January 3, 2023 to April 23, 2023

Regional Pilot Program Leader/Facilitator

The Innovative Learning and Living Institute (ILALI) is a national project established in 2021 to build diverse cohorts of young adults equipped to be engaged in their communities, develop themselves, and bridge social, cultural, and political divides. ILALI will be piloting its regional immersive residency program, Wayfinders, at two locations in 2023. This transformative experience is offered to a cohort of young adults in their twenties to spend four months living and learning together, utilizing an integrative, multidisciplinary curriculum designed to support participants in their capacity to “Become, Bridge, and Belong”.

ILALI is seeking seasoned experiential program cohort leader facilitators to advise, steward, and mentor cohort participants during this transformative residency. Facilitators will be supported by ILALI’s program manager and directors, and will also receive local support and collaboration with the Whidbey Institute as our host site partner for the initial pilot.

The leaders/facilitators will report directly to the program manager, and primarily deliver the curriculum to a cohort of between 18 and 24 participants. Leaders will hold space for group and individual learnings, problem solving, and collaboration on a daily basis throughout the residency. This will be Wayfinders’ inaugural Pilot, serving a cohort of young adults age 21-29 from the Puget Sound and greater Seattle area for a four-month period, on-site at the Whidbey Institute.

The ideal candidate has experience in long term collaborative program delivery, large and small group facilitation, and is energized by the opportunity to support personal and societal transformation. Success in this position requires the ability to assess individual and group needs in real time and make regular adjustments, all while holding space to allow the cohort to navigate their own development, growth, and conflicts. Also key are applying flexible and creative thinking while navigating uncertainty and evolving conditions.

Primary Responsibilities

- The primary responsibility of facilitators is the day-to-day coordination for pilot program curriculum delivery, facilitation collaborating and liaising with program manager, visiting faculty, and host site partner.
- Live and work on-site at the iconic and restorative Whidbey Institute, overseeing a cohort of 18-24 young adult participants alongside other leaders and facilitators..
- Conduct on-site day to day program logistics alongside fellow staff communicating with team, partners, and other resources in line with the developmental framework.
- Collaborate with fellow facilitators and program manager in the delivery and facilitation of Wayfinders curriculum.
- Commitment to a growth mindset, centering feedback, reflection, and active engagement using trauma-informed, culturally responsive support strategies to engage cohort participants.
- Be available to support cohort participants for the duration of the residency, with 1.5-2 days off weekly on average throughout the program.

Program Preparation

- Participate in in-depth training and ongoing learning of ILALI's full Integrative curriculum, ILALI best practices in developmental programming, reflective communication, and conflict resolution approaches.
- With support from program manager, assist in assigning triads for small group learning, and carefully assessing group dynamics on an ongoing basis by developing a strong understanding of the experience, worldview, needs, and approach for each member of the cohort.

Onsite Convening and Program Delivery

- Adopt and commit to an inclusive, collaborative developmental approach to leading onsite staff, cohort, and partners that supports ILALI's commitment to being a transpartisan and deliberately developmental organization.
- Foster a mindset of growth, centering feedback, reflection, and active engagement using trauma-informed, culturally responsive support strategies to engage cohort participants.
- Advise rotating triads of young adults in navigating their own worldview and self- efficacy, capturing and guiding their critical conversations as well as other learnings or incidents.
- Regular review and assessment of ongoing program curriculum content with fellow staff, manager, and directors.
- Oversee and participate in land and community service projects.
- Support the evaluation, monitoring, and re-entry of participants during and after the program.

- Ensure clear, regular, and consistent flow of information to core facilitator team, program manager, visiting faculty, and other ILALI team members, partners, and allies.
- Respond to ongoing support issues and incidents among cohort with respect and reverence for their commitment to the program and their personal development.
- Make regular contributions to ILALI's social media channels.

Desired Qualities, Experience, & Skills

- Background in emergent, creative or collaborative facilitation, and residential programs with young adults.
- Familiarity with experiential and/or somatic (body-centered) learning.
- Experience holding polarities and conflict resolution with a broad range of populations, including socioeconomic, racial, gender, orientation, religious, political, and otherwise.
- Natural communicator who listens deeply to center and prioritize the needs of others.
- Highly collaborative leader and problem solver who is adaptive and comfortable working with the ambiguity of a pilot program.
- Demonstrated commitment to racial, social, environmental, and economic justice, and building bridges across communities (class, race, ideology, and geography).
- Affinity for adult development, social change, and community building.
