2. C
An intentional tort. A tort is a private wrongdoing against a person or business. When a tort is intentional, one party plans to carry out an activity against another party. Because advertising is a planned promotional activity, the use of overly aggressively advertising tactics is an intentional action. BTA used advertising to discredit MZT, which hurt MZT's sales. In response, MZT may file a lawsuit against BTA on the grounds of defamation, if the advertising contained false statements. Negligence involves unintentional or accidental wrongdoings such as a distracted driver causing a minor car accident. Misappropriation or embezzlement is the theft of valuables that have been entrusted to someone's care. In business, this usually involves money. Criminal law addresses issues that involve wrongdoing against society, such as robbery and murder.

3. B
It is legal for an airline to overbook a flight. Since there are no laws preventing airlines from overbooking flights, bumping passengers from flights is common when traveling by air. Several transportation agencies, including the U.S. Department of Transportation and the Canadian Transportation Agency, among others, require that airlines first ask for volunteers to give up their seats in exchange for compensation. This may be in the form of cash or a voucher. The amount a passenger is compensated for lost luggage is subject to negotiation. Most airlines have a ceiling on the amount paid. Currently, there is no international "Bill of Rights." However, in 2011 the U.S. Department of Transportation expanded its airline passenger protections to better safeguard passengers from lost baggage fees, overbooked flights, and hidden airline fees. Airlines are not required to pay any compensation for flight delays due to bad weather.

4. D
Listening is an active process. Listening is a mental activity that requires effort and is something you actively do. Listening does not happen automatically, because you have to concentrate to understand the meaning of the sounds and words you hear. Listening does not prevent distractions, but the listener can help deal with them by focusing on the speaker. Listening does not automatically ensure comprehension, because sometimes a speaker's message is not clear and a listener must ask questions to clarify the message.

5. C

Speak loudly enough for the audience to hear the message. When making an oral presentation to a group, the speaker should speak loudly enough for everyone in the audience to hear what they are saying. If audience members cannot hear what the speaker is saying, they might misunderstand or misinterpret the message. A speaker should try not to turn away from the audience when presenting visual aids and should maintain eye contact with the audience. Because swaying back and forth can distract the audience, the speaker should avoid this type of movement.

SOURCE: CO:025 Make oral presentations

6. C

Logical evidence. Messages usually are more persuasive if they are supported by logical evidence. Logical evidence is based on fact rather than on opinion. If businesses are writing persuasive messages to encourage customers to do something, such as buy a product, they should include logical evidence to make the message more convincing. Businesses should avoid using strong language because it may offend readers. Typeface and graphic design are visual elements of the message rather than part of the content.

7. A

A relevant question to clarify information that the speaker had provided. Jeff asked the speaker to clarify a fact that was stated during the presentation. The question was about the area's crime rate, which was relevant to the topic at hand. Jeff's question was a close-ended inquiry because it required the message recipient to provide a response in one of two ways—10% or 15%. The question was not reflective in nature, so the message recipient did not need to put a lot of thought into or carefully word their response. A follow-up question is a question asked to clarify a previous question. There is not enough information provided to determine if Jeff previously asked a question.

8. A

Making an announcement during the weekly departmental meeting. Samantha should tell her staff about the new employee at the next staff meeting. It is an efficient way to communicate because Samantha can tell all of the staff members in her department about their new colleague at one time. Text messages, personal weblogs, and a semi-annual newsletter are not appropriate ways to communicate this type of workplace news.

SOURCE: CO:092 Choose and use appropriate channel for workplace communication
9. C
Know the location of products within the business. Knowledge of where products are kept in a business helps employees provide efficient service to customers who are looking for specific items. Employees can locate products for customers or direct customers to the right location. In a large business, the sales staff cannot be informed about all products that are in stock. It is also unlikely that the sales staff will know why the business does not carry certain products since that is a purchasing decision. Sales personnel should be helpful, but they are not always able to solve customers’ problems.

10. D
CEM tends to focus on customers’ needs, whereas CRM tends to focus on the business’s needs. Customer experience management includes the strategies, processes, and policies a business uses to meet or exceed customer expectations and to provide customers with outstanding experiences at every touchpoint. Another main goal of CEM is creating customer advocacy—word-of-mouth promotion and referrals to other potential customers. CRM, on the other hand, is defined as the strategies, processes, technology, and people a business uses to build, maintain, and maximize the long-term value of customer relationships. CRM is more business-centric than CEM, and uses touchpoints to learn something valuable about the customer that the company can benefit from.

11. C
Responding to negative and positive online reviews. Online reviews of products on social media can have a huge impact. A business can increase customer satisfaction post-sale by responding to online reviews. This shows that the business cares about its customers and can lead to repeat business. Posting about the release of a product line, obtaining new followers that could make a purchase, and offering discounts for first-time customers are not related to customers' post-sale experiences.

SOURCE: CR:028 Use digital media to enhance customer post-sales experience

12. A
Alert guests that their tables are ready via text message. When restaurants are busy, it is important to keep customers entertained to improve their experience. One way to do so is to alert them via text message that their table is ready. That way, customers do not have to sit and wait—they can explore the surrounding area, run errands, etc. Providing discounts to guests who wait over 30 minutes is a good customer service policy, but it will not necessarily help keep customers from becoming impatient while they wait, because they will not receive the discount until they have already eaten. Determining which aspect of the restaurant's operations is slow can help improve wait times in the long run, but it will not keep customers from becoming impatient while they wait. Finally, checking reviews to see how customers feel about the wait time is a good way to improve customer service, but it will not help keep customers from becoming impatient while they wait.

SOURCE: CR:038 Identify strategies to manage customer experience during peaks in demand
13. B

Return. Most businesses in the hospitality industry rely on repeat customers to be profitable. Poor customer service is the primary reason that customers do not return to a business, so it is important that every customer receive good service every time. Goodwill is either the kindness of customers—something a business cannot rely on to be profitable—or an intangible asset related to a company purchase. Capital is wealth and is not directly related to customer service. While some customers might review businesses in the hospitality industry, their personal records will not determine the success of a business.

SOURCE: CR:049 Explain the nature of customer service in the hospitality and tourism industry

14. B

An employee’s personality impacts customer service practices. Riley has an outgoing, extraverted personality. This makes her more willing to engage customers. Therefore, her personality affects her customer service practices. This is not an example of how a company’s culture affects its customer service. Extraverted people do not necessarily have a higher success rate in hospitality; many jobs in the field are well-suited for introverts. It is not true that employees should try to keep their distance from customers.

15. C

To accommodate the couple’s special needs. Many people have dietary restrictions, so making sure that the airline could provide gluten-free meals is a way to accommodate the special needs of the couple. Not all clients will require calls to the airline about in-flight meals. Asking about in-flight meals is not related to the airline’s contact information. Accessibility usually relates to physical disabilities and not meal restrictions.

SOURCE: CR:054 Accommodate special needs/specific requests of customers

16. A

Showing concern for customers' lengthy wait. A moment of truth in customer service is an interaction during which a customer can form a lasting impression of your company. One way that employees can create positive moments of truth is to demonstrate empathy and concern when customers are experiencing frustration. Customers who feel that the company cares about them will be more likely to form a positive impression. A customer-satisfaction survey will not necessarily create a positive moment of truth. Following a script when talking to customers can make the customer feel unimportant and unheard. Finally, aggressively upselling to customers does not necessarily create a positive moment of truth; rather, pushing costlier sales can create a negative impression.

17. D
Intangible. The major characteristics of economic services are very similar to those of economic goods. They must be useful, scarce, and transferable. However, services are not physical objects. They are intangible activities performed by other people for a certain amount of money. Intangible means not capable of being detected through the senses. Useful and scarce are characteristics of both economic goods and services. Physical is a characteristic of economic goods.

18. B
Buyer's. This situation is brought about by a large supply and a relatively small demand which results in lower prices. 19. A
Transferring risk. Transferring risk occurs when the risk is shifted to another party. Purchasing an extended warranty transfers the risk of repairing defective automobiles from the buyer to the seller. A business retains risk when it decides to keep the risk. A business avoids risk when it recognizes risk and completely avoids it. Elevating risk refers to increasing risk.

20. A
Fewer job. A trade deficit decreases the gross domestic product, which reflects the health of a nation's economy. A large trade deficit often leads to a lower standard of living and fewer job opportunities because the nation is importing more than it exports. A large trade deficit indicates a significant decrease in exports, an increase in imports, and less trade in general.

21. A
It decreases the GDP. The underground economy consists of cash or barter transactions for which no receipts are kept. Since these amounts are not added to the gross domestic product (GDP), GDP is reduced. The underground economy does not cause economic declines, which occur when the GDP is not growing, or trade surpluses, which exist when a country exports more goods than it imports.

22. A
Cultural. Culture refers to the customs, habits, and traditions of a particular group of people. If businesses want to develop favorable relationships with foreign businesses, they need to recognize, understand, and respect other cultures. A business that does not learn about the cultural differences may do or say something to offend a foreign customer or potential customer. Political factors relate to government issues. Economic factors are ways that a nation meets consumers' competing wants with limited resources. Intellect is a person's cognitive ability.

Increased sales. When tourism enters a new area, local businesses usually benefit from increased economic activity. Tourists who stay at a resort are likely to spend money elsewhere, and newly employed resort workers might also be encouraged to spend more at local shops. Property taxes would not necessarily increase because the taxes collected from the tourists themselves could lead to reduced local taxes. The quantity of goods is more likely to increase than decrease because the increased customers will lead to more demand for products. Finally, a new resort would not decrease the number of job openings in local shops. The increased economic activity would be more likely to add more jobs.

24. D

Guide or direct others. A person who wants to lead change in the workplace must have the ability to guide or direct others with the intention to transform or alter something. Getting people to change involves guiding or directing them to do something in a different way. People usually will not follow the lead of another person if that person cannot provide guidance or direction. A person who wants to lead change often needs to answer a variety of questions to explain the need for change. A person who wants to lead change does not need to make friends with managers or perform all types of tasks.

25. C

Emotional intelligence. A leader is an individual with the ability to guide or direct others in a desired manner to achieve goals. Although leadership styles vary, effective leaders tend to exhibit several common characteristics, one of which is a high level of emotional intelligence. Emotional intelligence is the ability to recognize and manage your own emotions as well as those of others. This means that you are aware of your emotions, respond to them appropriately, and then do the same with the emotions of others. Shared vision is the ability to share a vision (e.g., better way of doing things) and use it to inspire others. Responsibility involves taking ownership of a problem, making sure it is fixed, and taking steps to prevent it from happening again. When a leader exhibits integrity, they adhere to an established set of personal ethics and sound moral principles in all situations.

26. B

The willingness to step out of their comfort zones to take positive risks. Self-confidence is a positive belief in your own talents, skills, and objectives. Self-confident people are willing to take positive risks, which involve stepping out of their comfort zones. Self-confident people understand that mistakes are a part of life and do not let the risk of failure keep them from taking action. Self-confident people are willing to admit their mistakes, accept compliments while remaining humble, and maintain their beliefs and behaviors even when others are critical of those beliefs and behaviors.

27. A
Anticipate. You must be able to anticipate and plan for changes that are likely to occur if you want some control over your future. Avoiding change is not possible. Agonizing over change or waiting for change to occur would not help you to control your future.

SOURCE: EI:026 Adjust to change

28. B
Empathy. Empathy is the ability to put yourself in another person's place. In this situation, the employee has indicated to the supervisor that they understand the supervisor's feelings. Indifference is a total lack of concern. Assertiveness is the ability to stand up for your own rights without trampling on the rights of others. Submissiveness is the willingness to step aside for others and let their wishes take precedence over yours.

29. D
Acknowledging her efforts. One way to motivate team members is to acknowledge their work accomplishments either individually or in a group setting (e.g., meeting). When employees feel that management appreciates their contributions to the company, they are often motivated to keep up the good work. In this situation, Matthew is not providing Shelby with a monetary reward, giving Shelby new job responsibilities, or supporting Shelby's ideas.

30. B
Recognizing and rewarding progress toward the vision. One way that team leaders can show enthusiasm while enlisting others to work toward a shared vision is by recognizing and rewarding progress toward the vision. This will pass the enthusiasm on to other team members. Applying for promotions within the organization does not show enthusiasm toward the team vision. Team leaders should share the vision with all team members and make an effort to get to know suppliers and vendors as well.

31. A
Organizational culture. Organizational culture is the standards, rituals, attitudes, and belief systems that create the workplace environment and influence the interactions within it. Organizational culture is the “tone” of the work environment. Because each business functions differently, each business has a unique culture. For example, one business environment might have a rigid chain of command, a strict dress code, an inflexible work schedule, and provide minimal information to employees. In such an environment, employees may feel creatively suppressed and suspicious of management, which often negatively affects employees' attitudes and productivity levels. On the other hand, a business that communicates well with employees, has flexible work schedules, and encourages suggestions and creativity tends to foster trust, which creates a positive work environment. The company's legal business structure (e.g., partnership, corporation) affects the company's tax obligation. Natural resources are items found in nature that the business uses to produce goods and services. Cognitive ability is the ability to learn and understand. Individuals, rather than companies, have various cognitive abilities.

32. C
Unclear or inadequate communication. One of the most important ways to model ethical behavior is to have clear, open discussions. Ethics aren't always black and white, and sometimes it can be challenging to know what to do or what is expected. Carter may have tried to model ethical behavior in regard to use of company supplies, but his employees were unaware of his expectations and did not know that their actions were unethical. This is likely due to unclear/inadequate communication. Carter did provide feedback to his employees. There is no indication that there were too many rules or that there was inconsistency in ethical principles.

33. B
The impact of new technologies should always be evaluated. An entrepreneur should always evaluate the potential impact that new technologies could have on business opportunities and competition. While the application of technology to business practices often has huge benefits, it is not always feasible or wise to apply them to every business practice. While the benefits of new technologies may be expensive or overrated sometimes, their impact and business potential should always be evaluated.

34. C
Fee-only. A fee-only financial advisor cannot earn commission, only making money from fees that they charge clients. Fee-based advisors can make money from fees they charge clients, but also from outside funds or commissions. Advisors of any type should be ethical. A robo advisor isn't a person; instead, it is a digital platform that uses algorithms to provide investment advice and management services to clients.

35. A
To maintain financial control. Financial control of a business is the overall purpose of accounting. Accurate accounting information helps a business maintain financial control by showing how the business is doing in terms of earning a profit and paying expenses. Businesses use accounting information to make any necessary changes to keep the business in good financial condition. The accounting function does not help businesses monitor banking regulations, organize governmental support, or obtain legal information.

Information about accounting policies. The footnotes section of the balance sheet contains additional, relevant information, such as information about the accounting policies used in creating the financial statement. Assets should be listed in the “assets” section of the balance sheet. Balance-sheet users should be aware of what liabilities are. Photos of employees are not likely to be relevant to the balance sheet.

37. B

It encourages managers to assess activities and adjust figures more frequently. A rolling (continuous) budget replaces each passing month with a new month added to the end of the budget, so there is always a year-long budget in place. Because a new month is added to the budget on a regular basis, managers need to assess and adjust figures on a monthly basis to reflect the various factors that influence business activities. By being able to change and adapt, the rolling budget provides the business with flexibility. The zero-based budgeting method requires managers to demonstrate the need for every expense. Although unexpected expenses do come up and should be a consideration when establishing any type of budget, a rolling budget does not provide managers with an advantage over other budgeting methods in terms of forecasting unexpected expenses. A rolling budget does not eliminate the need for a master budget. A master budget can be developed using the rolling budget methodology.

38. C

Finance. When a business needs outside funding, it typically relies on its finance department to obtain the monies. A company’s finance department is responsible for money management decisions, including obtaining the financing and capital needed to run a business. Accounting ensures that a company has accurate information about its current financial situation. A sales department is responsible for meeting company sales’ goals. Operations is responsible for the effective use of a company’s available resources to conduct business activities.

39. C

Free cash flow. Free cash flow is an indication of how efficient a company is at generating cash. Although not always the case, high free cash flow can signal that the company is growing, while a negative free cash flow can be a sign that the company is suffering financially. Free cash flow is determined by subtracting capital expenditures from operating cash flow. To determine a business’s working capital, subtract current liabilities from current assets. Amortization is used by accountants to lower the value of a loan over time. Profit is the reward a business receives for taking the risk involved in investing in a business, or the income that is left once all expenses are paid.

$2,012. To calculate how much the business paid in credit card processing fees, first determine the total transaction interchange fees by multiplying the interchange rate by the total transaction amount (2% X $100,000 = $2,000). Then, calculate the total merchant account provider fees by multiplying the fee per transaction by the number of transactions for the month ($.05 X 40 = $2). Finally, add together the total transaction interchange fees, total merchant account provider fees, and monthly fee to determine the total credit card processing fees that the business paid last month ($2,000 + $2 + $10 = $2,012).

Behavior. When segmenting by behavior, marketers consider factors such as the market's product knowledge, purchasing habits, and responses to products. Occasion segmentation classifies buying behavior by important events such as birthdays, holidays, and weddings. Geographics involves segmenting a market by location. Psychographic segmentation is the division of a market on the basis of consumers' lifestyles and personalities. Demographic segmentation considers factors such as income, education, age, and gender.

46. B
Sales are expected to increase by 5%. Spreadsheet software programs allow businesses to use a computer to perform accounting and other financial calculations. An advantage of using a spreadsheet program is that a business can make various assumptions about sales and find out quickly what effect they will have on its financial situation. For example, a business could change the level of sales by different percentages, such as 5% or 10%, to find out the effect that would have on net income. The spreadsheet program automatically does the calculations. Although keeping appointments might lead to sales, a salesperson would likely not use a spreadsheet program to track appointments. Mailing labels are generated with database programs. Database programs are also used to track customers’ purchases.

SOURCE: NF:010 Demonstrate basic spreadsheet applications

47. B
Trends. A trend is the general direction in which people or events are moving. It's important for businesses to keep an eye on trends because trends can help businesses find opportunities. The restaurant owner notices that customers are eating healthier food, so they are able to take advantage of that opportunity by offering healthier menu items. This is not an example of a regulation, economic policy, or theory helping the restaurant owner find a business opportunity.

SOURCE: NF:013 Describe current business trends

48. B
It's difficult to determine the right mix of digital and human interactions. While many guests enjoy the privacy that digital interactions provide, others may desire a human and personal experience. These differences in guests' preferences make it very difficult for hotels to determine which type of service guests actually prefer in any given situation. Increased efficiency resulting from automated services is a benefit, not a challenge. Guests’ attitudes toward automated services are usually favorable and are not a motivating factor in their hotel choice or how much they are willing to spend on a room.

SOURCE: NF:048 Describe current issues and trends in the hospitality and tourism industry

49. C
Hotels can customize guest room preferences. A customer database allows hotels to gather guest information and preferences so they can personalize the guests' experiences. For example, if a customer purchases several soft drinks from room service, the hotel can store that information in a database and then prepare the room by stocking the mini fridge with the same soft drink upon the customer's return. While restaurants can use social media to receive feedback, they are not necessarily using a database to improve customer satisfaction when they do so. A variety of services can be integrated into one system, but this does not necessarily depend on a database; rather, it is due to hotel and restaurant management system software. Finally, while technology such as washable chips allows management to determine inventory remotely, this is also not an example of how databases help improve customer satisfaction.

SOURCE: NF:060 Explain ways that technology impacts the hospitality and tourism industry
50. B
Information security. Businesses often maintain personal information about their customers, such as credit card numbers, bank account numbers, and account passwords. Businesses must take reasonable care to protect and secure their customers' personal information to reduce the risk of fraudulent behavior, such as computer hacking and identity theft. Businesses should develop policies about removing digital information from their facilities. A patent provides legal protection to the owners of inventions. The customers' privacy, rather than employees' privacy, has been compromised in the presented situation. There is no indication that data entry problems exist with the information provided.

51. C
The author of the site has reputable credentials. One way to know that a website is a good source of quality information is to look at the author's credentials. An author who has written about or studied the subject is an indicator that the website is reliable. Isaiah could use this site to find out reputable information about credit card options. An article that is 15 years old is likely too old to be reliable. A website with advertisements for credit card companies might be biased because it is being sponsored by the products it is supposedly reviewing. A .com URL is not necessarily an indicator of a quality website.

SOURCE: NF:079 Evaluate quality and source of information

52. D
Automated. Room key cards are similar to credit cards. When the guest swipes their room key card at the point of sale (e.g., hotel restaurant), the computer chip that is embedded in the room key card transmits transaction data to the hotel's computer system, which adds the expense to the guest's folio or bill. The guest pays for their purchases during the checkout process. This software helps the resort accurately track its guests' buying behavior and increases hotel efficiency because it reduces paperwork by using a central bookkeeping system. The software is not independent, remote, or retractable.

SOURCE: NF:106 Use software to automate services

53. C
Discover relationships. Data mining is the process of searching computer databases for patterns of information and correlations or relationships among information. Businesses use the information they obtain from data mining to make different types of business decisions. For example, a business might want to increase its sales. The business might use data-mining techniques to determine and analyze which customers possess the highest buying potential. The primary purpose of data mining is not to stabilize sales, develop services, or summarize ideas.

SOURCE: NF:148 Discuss the nature of data mining
54. B

Salesperson A. Businesses often maintain databases of information to determine which salesperson has the highest amount of sales during a period of time. The database helps the business analyze information because salespeople with the most orders or the highest average invoice are not necessarily the ones who have the highest amount of sales. In this situation, salesperson A has 125 orders that each average $215 for a total of $26,875 ($215 x 125 = $26,875). Although salesperson B and salesperson D each have more orders, the average invoice is less, which results in less sales ($26,832 for salesperson B and $26,797 for salesperson D). Salesperson C has a higher average invoice amount but fewer orders for a total of $26,378.

55. A

Descriptive statistics. Descriptive statistics are numbers that are used to summarize and describe data. Examples of descriptive statistics are mean (the simple mathematical average of a set of numbers), median (the middle number in a sorted list of numbers), and mode (the number occurring most frequently in a set). By analyzing descriptive statistics, marketing and other business managers can see the current state of affairs within the company as well as past performance. Predictive statistics, on the other hand, are used to help forecast future probabilities and trends based on historical data. Researchers use various modeling and statistical techniques to achieve this goal. In this example, Roger is analyzing descriptive statistics, not predictive statistics to aid his decision-making. He is not coding data or studying customer feedback.

57. C

Secondary. In general, data for research purposes are classified into two categories: primary and secondary data. Primary data are facts collected specifically for the problem or project at hand. In other words, primary data are collected through original research. Secondary data, on the other hand, are facts and figures that have already been collected for purposes other than the project at hand. Census data, psychographics, public opinion polls, and tourism forecasts are all examples of secondary sources of data, not primary (or "original") sources of data. "Seasonal" is not a term typically used to describe sources of information or data.

Bar chart. A bar chart is effective for showing separate data sets that are similar, such as room bookings for different months. A pie chart is best used when there are less than five categories to plot and/or to represent parts of a whole. A Venn diagram is only effective when data sets have a common, or overlapping, element. A scatter chart is used to illustrate a relationship or correlation between two variables.

Keep the slides simple. Presentation slides should be designed as simply as possible to avoid distracting, confusing, or overwhelming your audience members. Slides should include simple bullet points and one or two visuals at most. Text should be limited to whatever is absolutely necessary to convey the most important information. It would be unprofessional to include too many graphics or words per slide.

Adequate training. Businesses need to train employees so they will understand their jobs and have the ability to work with customers. Employees who know what they are expected to do and how to do it usually create a sense of quality in a business. They are able to function effectively and provide quality service to customers. In return, customers appreciate the quality and continue to buy from the business. Once they are trained, competitive wages and fringe benefits help keep good employees. Ongoing assessments tell employees how they are doing and provide suggestions for improvement.

Limit shore tours to ones approved by the cruise line. Cruise lines conduct extensive research and planning to determine the best route and destination points. The companies are familiar with many of the local tour and transportation services at the ports of call, and not all of them meet the standards of service and ethical responsibility that the cruise line or traveler expects. Therefore, tourists should use tour companies that are approved or recommended by the cruise line. This recommendation also applies to any transportation service (e.g., bus or taxi). Valuables, such as jewelry, should be locked in a safe on the ship to reduce the chance of theft onboard the ship or while on shore. For safety measures, a tourist should travel in organized groups instead of alone while on shore.

An inventor obtains a patent for a new product. Intellectual property is defined as having no physical characteristics. In other words, it is intangible. A breakthrough project relies on the use of new technology but does not create new technology as an R&D project does.

Creating a quality assurance checklist. Proactive quality control involves stopping problems before they happen. One way to do this is by creating a quality assurance checklist. Quality assurance methods are typically proactive and often save money since defective products are never produced. Reactive quality control focuses on fixing problems after they've happened. This can include tasks such as filling out a corrective action report, inspecting finished products, and processing customer returns. Reactive quality control tends to cost more money and create more waste, since problems aren't discovered until after the products have already been produced.

Monitor and control expenses. An invoice (bill) documents how much a customer or client owes for the goods or services a business provides. To operate, a business orders office supplies, outsources services (e.g., legal advice), leases equipment, etc. Its vendors send the business bills (invoices) that state how much the business owes. The business monitors and tracks the invoices to make sure it is billed correctly. If the business finds a discrepancy (e.g., incorrect tax amount) on a bill, the business will likely contact the vendor to make necessary adjustments. Tracking invoices is one way the business controls its expenses. Accounts receivable are the monies coming into the business. Businesses do not track invoices to evaluate the vendors' performance levels.

SOURCE: OP:184 Track invoices

68. D
Purchasing. Purchasing employees are responsible for buying the raw materials that a business uses to make its products. Buying higher or lower quality materials can sometimes present an ethical conflict for these employees. Employees in shipping, inventory management, and accounting do not purchase materials.

Raw materials. A raw material is a basic component that is used to produce manufactured goods and products. Steel, corn, and lumber are all raw materials because they are basic, unprocessed components unchanged from their natural state. A finished good is the end result of this manufacturing process. Work in process refers to goods and products that have started but have not yet completed the manufacturing process. Discretionary items are products that are wanted but not needed.

Social media posts. A company's digital assets exist only in digital form, often online, in the cloud, or on company servers. Digital assets include social media posts, any company websites or apps, intellectual property, and customer information and contact lists. Computer keyboards, monitors, and manufacturing equipment are also assets, but not digital assets. Although company stock may be bought and sold digitally, the stock itself is not a digital asset. In addition, stock is only an asset for the investors who own that stock.

Suspicious emails and attachments. Suspicious emails such as those containing attachments or requesting that an employee reset a password are a serious threat to any business's cybersecurity. Phishing emails are an inexpensive, common, and highly effective form of cyberattack, so each member of an organization should be trained on how they work and how to recognize one. GDPR is a set of regulations put in place for the European Union (EU) about data protection. While it is very important that members of the IT department and certain executives know the details of this regulation, it is usually not necessary for every employee to understand the entire law. This is specifically the case in areas not governed by the EU. Workplace safety regulations should be taught to all employees but are not likely to address cybersecurity risks. Social media policies are also important but not directly tied to the risk of cyberattack.

Assess your skills and interests. Before you make any career decisions, it’s important to assess your unique skills, interests, talents, and experiences. By performing a thorough self-assessment, you can identify potential occupations that you may enjoy. Researching every career you are familiar with would be time-consuming and overwhelming. Instead, you should focus on learning about a few select occupations that match your personality and abilities. Shadowing someone at work can help you determine if a potential occupation is right for you, but you should perform a self-assessment first to determine whom to shadow. Similarly, applying for an internship or apprenticeship is helpful only after you’ve narrowed down the career fields that you are interested in.

Provide a brief explanation of your qualifications for a job. A letter of application should be considered an opportunity to convince the reader that you have the qualifications that match the job opening. Your “sales pitch” should be briefly presented, saving the details for the job interview. You should avoid the use of humor in application letters since you are writing about an important, serious topic. Educational achievements should be stressed in relation to the job opening if you have little or no work experience to discuss. The employer should receive a neatly typed, original letter of application.

Low profit margin. Pricing affects promotion decisions in a number of different ways. For instance, products with very low profit margins are usually promoted in lower-priced media. In other words, companies that have low profit margins and/or small promotional budgets often promote themselves largely on social media, which usually costs very little. The opposite would be true for a product with a high profit margin. Products that have high profit margins are usually promoted in a combination of media, including radio, TV, newspapers, and magazines. Flexible and realistic prices are not as likely to affect a business's promotional decisions.

No, it can delay entry into the full market. Test marketing involves introducing a product to a limited market to see what its acceptance will be. Test marketing serves to guide the planning of actual marketing strategies. The product may be tried out in specific locations to get customers' and retailers' reactions before starting a wider distribution. However, not all new products need test marketing. Test marketing may not be used for some products/services because it is costly, delays entry into the full market, provides no guarantee of actual success, may not give an accurate picture of performance, and gives competitors an opportunity to steal the idea while it is being tested.

Product cannibalization. Businesses watch and adjust their product lines to meet customers' changing needs and wants, which helps them compete effectively in the marketplace and generate profits. A business might decide to remove a product from its product mix to avoid or eliminate cannibalization, which occurs when the sale of one of a company's products takes away sales from another product. In short, the business will give up one product to extend the life cycle of another product. Alteration is a product-mix strategy that involves making changes to the company's products or lines. Alteration may involve completely redesigning a product or changing things such as color, style, or packaging. Substitution involves using a similar product in place of another good or service. A business might substitute one or a few products, but it is unlikely to substitute items for its entire inventory. Inventory shrinkage involves inventory losses due to shoplifting, employee theft, breakage, misplaced goods, or poor record keeping.

New products are easier to introduce. Products are easier to introduce under an accepted, recognized brand name. One of the reasons this is true is that family brands are tied to company image. Family brands are used for related products, not unrelated products. The amount of shelf space needed depends on the number of items in the product line. Sellers are generally more willing to provide additional shelf space for an addition to a successful family brand.

Are cheaper and safer than introducing new products. A product extension, or line extension, uses an existing brand to introduce a new and related product in the same product category, often to satisfy previously unmet needs in that market. Because product extensions can rely on the reputation of the parent brand, they are often less expensive and less risky than introducing a completely new product. Brand extensions allow businesses to compete in different product categories. Product extensions have no bearing on manufacturing speed. Product extensions build off of, but do not replace, products already on the market.

Benefits. A corporate brand is a brand that represents a company or parent business entity. An effective corporate brand uses a variety of tools that creates and reinforces certain impressions and images of the business in the minds of the consumers, which involves communicating the company's benefits. For example, an entertainment business's brand is likely to communicate the idea or image of "fun" as a benefit to consumers. Successful brands do not communicate motives in a vague way. Not all members of the target market may understand the business's jargon. Procedures are the processes that employees use to perform certain tasks.

Will be able to fulfill the company's needs in a timely manner. When selecting vendors and suppliers, companies should make sure that the vendor they choose will be able to fulfill the company's needs in a timely manner so that delays and other production issues can be avoided. It is unnecessary for a vendor to agree with the company's stance on political issues, and politics should not be a reason for choosing one vendor over another. It would be inappropriate and unethical to select a vendor simply because the vendor was willing to cooperate in unethical business practices. A vendor's ability to participate in the company's annual volunteer event should not affect a vendor's quality as a potential business partner.

Public service. Public-service promotions inform customers about noncontroversial issues that are in the public's best interest. Sales promotion. Sales promotion consists of any activity other than advertising, publicity, and personal selling that are designed to increase sales. The prizes that can result from use of Monopoly help to increase sales. Transit advertising is a form of out-of-home media such as billboards, car wraps, and street furniture ads. Personal selling is an effort by a company representative to complete sales transactions. Publicity is any nonpersonal presentation of ideas, goods or services that is not paid for by the company or individual which benefits from or is harmed by it.

Become an expert on the cars he will be selling. No matter what product they are selling, no salesperson can sell without preparation. The first thing Brandon should do before making any sales is to learn about the cars he will be selling, so that he can effectively help his customers find cars that fit their specific needs. Establishing relationships with fellow salespeople is beneficial, but not necessary to make sales. Prospecting and qualifying leads is something Brandon should do after learning about the cars he will be selling. As a selling point. Company advertising often provides salespeople with information that they can use in selling. In this case, the salesperson could use the information about "no finance charges for six months" as a selling point to encourage customers to buy. If all other factors were equal, the information about no finance charges might be the factor that caused a customer to buy from the salesperson's company rather than another. Salespeople should not pressure customers or try to use promotional information for personal gain. Most salespeople do not have the authority to reduce prices for advertised goods or services.

Customer service. If you offer a product with the best price and the best quality, you might think you'll beat all the competition. Unfortunately, that will only get you so far—over time, price and quality can be easily matched among competitors. In selling, customer service is where the real competition among businesses begins. For example, imagine you're a salesperson for a company that manufactures tires to sell to automakers. The tires you make aren't much different than the tires your clients could get from any other company, and the prices are similar, too. That's when customer service becomes key. Are you available when your clients need you? Are you willing to help them when they need to change orders? Can you help your customers if there's a problem with their shipments? These are the actions that will separate your company from the rest of the pack. Promotions, online reviews, and product longevity may help your product sell, but customer service is where the competition among businesses truly begins.

$85.06. Many restaurants offer special prices on certain types of dinners to attract customers. Customers order those dinners because they are priced lower than usual. If customers also have coupons for discounts, the restaurant calculates the discount to determine the total cost. In this example, the restaurant is offering lobster dinners for $22.99. A table of four orders the dinners, but two of the customers have coupons for discounts. To process the coupons, the restaurant subtracts the discount amount from the cost of the two dinners. To determine the amount of discount, add the cost of the two dinners and calculate the 15% discount ($22.99 X 2 = $45.98; $45.98 X 15% or .15 = $6.897 or $6.90). Then, subtract the discount from the cost of the two dinners ($45.98 - $6.90 = $39.08). Add the discounted price of the two dinners to the regular price of the other two dinners to calculate the total cost for the table ($39.08 + $22.99 + $22.99 = $85.06).

It is the source of employees’ energy and performance, and it maintains the healthy functioning of the business. It is not true that some employees do not need direction. Staffing is not necessarily more important than directing. Finally, it is not true that only top-level managers participate in directing. Directing occurs at all levels of management.
