

SPOTLIGHT ON: E. Esposito Interiors

Is there a common thread that unites your designs?

My goal for my designs is not to create my own style, but to design spaces my clients want to live in; spaces that are as unique as they are.

You have a passion for furniture design. When did it begin, and how do your clients benefit from your expertise?

My passion for furniture started when I worked for celebrity designer Steven Cordrey in Los Angeles; his passion for creating unique pieces tailored to his clients was infectious. My clients like that I can create custom pieces to make their spaces even more unique. For example, a recent client required a dining table with a transitional style, so I designed a one-of-a-kind piece that combines gray-stained oak with stainless steel.

Make a design prediction.

I anticipate that bold colors will continue to drive designs. A neutral or gray base has been on trend for many years, so a clean, white-and-black palette with vibrant accent colors will be a nice change. I also believe the development of organic and natural products will continue—especially products that are derived from recycled materials. I have a passion for sustainable design and want to continue to explore products that will reduce the negative impacts on the environment and my clients' health.
