A welcome departure from the average PowerPoint-laden, snooze-inducing leadership presentation, Morag’s talks are engaging, interactive, and immersive. She tailors each presentation to address the specific concerns of the organization and shares powerful stories and pragmatic data that attendees can immediately relate to. Through lively discussions and activities with real-world application, audiences practice concepts that increase individual leadership impact, enhance team effectiveness, and drive business growth. Audiences have so much fun they forget they’re working and leave with the momentum to implement their learnings in their working relationships.

Morag’s latest book, You, Me, We: Why We All Need a Friend at Work (And How to Show Up As One!), is the recipient of nine national and international book awards. It introduces the concept of the Ally Mindset, outlining the personal and business benefits of genuine friendships in the workplace, and provides a roadmap for becoming a better ally. The Future-Proof Workplace is a wake-up call to leaders everywhere and an essential guide to navigating the future that is already here, with insights on emerging technologies and shifting values that are changing the way we work. Her first book, Cultivate: The Power of Winning Relationships, is highly relevant today and shines a light on the four relationship dynamics and associated people skills that make or break business success.

Morag has written for American Management Association Quarterly, CIO.com, and Entrepreneur and has been profiled by Fast Company, Huffington Post, Inc., the Association for Talent Development, and many others. She is a member of Marshall Goldsmith’s 100 Coaches, was named the Women in Cable Telecommunications Industry Partner of the Year, and won HR.com’s Top Leadership Partner award.
