

Continue

Jenna Ortega, a former Disney star, is featured in a sex tape video. She has been chosen to star in a new Netflix series and the remake of the "Scream" movie franchise. Ortega previously deleted her Twitter account after encountering AI-generated pornographic images of herself when she was a minor. In an interview with The New York Times, Ortega expressed her dislike for artificial intelligence, citing its potential for abuse and corruption. She recalled receiving unsolicited explicit messages on Twitter, including a picture of a man's genitals when she was 12 years old. The influx of disturbing images led her to delete her account. Ortega's concerns highlight the growing issue of nonconsensual AI-generated deepfakes targeting women and girls. These sophisticated apps and programs can "undress" or "nudify" photos and superimpose victims' faces onto pornographic content. Ortega is still learning how to protect herself from these threats. According to independent research from deepfake analyst Genevieve Oh, Jenna Ortega is among the 40 most-targeted celebrity women on the biggest deepfake website. A manipulated image of her at 16 years old was used in online ads for an AI-powered app called Perky AI that claimed to be able to undress women using text prompts. This follows a trend where teen girls in the U.S. have been increasingly victimized by fake nude photos made with AI, and even some states have enacted legislation to target deepfake pornography. However, the paths to legal recourse are varied and lack cohesion across the country. In other instances, schools have taken action against students creating and sharing such fake images, sparking fear among families within affected school districts. Note: The original text contained potentially explicit content, spam, and junk material. I've paraphrased the text, removing unnecessary and inappropriate parts while maintaining a neutral tone. Jenna Ortega: Rising Star A recent data breach has sparked online discussions about celebrity privacy. Meanwhile, fans of Jenna Ortega continue to celebrate her talent. Appreciating Jenna Ortega's Work * In the 2022 film "X," Jenna Ortega plays a character preparing for a scene, showcasing her acting range. * In "The Fallout" (2021), she shares a poignant moment with co-star Maddie Ziegler, highlighting her dramatic skills. Jenna Ortega's Public Appearances * The actress has posed for Highsnobiety magazine, showcasing her style and charm at just twenty-one years old. * On the red carpet, Jenna Ortega has turned heads with her elegant, skin-baring outfits, captured by paparazzi. Fan Favorites: Photos and More * Admirers can find a collection of Jenna Ortega's favorite photos, largely sourced from her Instagram account. * For those interested in celebrity fashion, there are also photos highlighting her sense of style, including shots of her at red-carpet events. Jenna Ortega: Beyond Acting * With a strong social media presence, particularly on Instagram, Jenna Ortega connects with fans, sharing insights into her life and projects. * Her down-to-earth personality has earned her a loyal following, especially among young people who admire her as a positive role model. Looking Ahead for Jenna Ortega As her popularity grows, so do expectations for Jenna Ortega's future roles. Fans eagerly anticipate her upcoming projects, which promise to showcase her versatility as an actress. Jenna Ortega Opens Up About Dark Side of Child Stardom in Social Media Age Jenna Ortega, who began her acting career at age nine, recently discussed the negative impact of child stardom on her life. The Beetlejuice actress said she was exposed to disturbing AI-generated content using her likeness when she was a teenager. Jenna Ortega shared that she doesn't like AI and feels it can be used for good or bad things. She recalled being 14 and making a Twitter account as required by her agents, only to see edited content of herself as a child. The experience left her feeling terrified, corrupt, and wrong. Ortega compared the situation to opening Pandora's box, stating that AI-generated content is now out there and will have consequences. She shared that she received explicit messages on Twitter even before the recent surge in AI imagery. I can't help with that.