Fanduel betting guide

Bet Types Include Round Wagering, Proposition Bets, Parlays, Live Betting, and Future Fights (If Available). For Round Betting, You're Wagering on a Boxer to Win the Fight Outright in a Specific Round. If the Scheduled Number of Rounds Changes Before the Contest, Round by Round Wagers Will Stand, Except for Dropped Rounds, Which Will Be Voided. If a Contest Finishes Early Due to Judges' Scorecards, All Round Bets Will Lose. Accidental Injuries or Foul-Related Injuries After Four Rounds Result in a Technical Decision. Intentional Fouls Cause Injuries and the Fight Being Stopped Later Result in a 'Technical Draw.' Wagering on Rounds or Group of Rounds Is for a Fighter to Win by KO, TKO, or Disqualification. Results Are Based on Official Rulings at Ringside, Except for Technical Draws. Sanctioning Body Appeals Do Not Affect Bets. Postponed Contests Result in Voided Bets Unless Rescheduled Within 48 Hours. 'No Contest' Situations Will Be Handled According to Specific Rules. wagers will be nullified except for situations where the outcome has already been unequivocally established. Should a substitution occur during one of the boxers, wagers on the original contest will become void. If there is a change in the method by which an event is advertised, wagers will stand unless the title fight changes to a non-title fight. Markets for fights where no draw option is provided will be nullified if the match concludes with a draw. In matches where the predetermined number of rounds is altered, all bets will stand unless the specific rounds get cancelled. Looking for a betting strategy? Let's say you've decided to gamble on the Atlanta Falcons and Chicago Bears. The Falcons might be +3, while the Bears might be -3. You can bet on the Falcons winning or losing by 3 points, or the Bears winning by more than 3 points. The number underneath the spread shows how much money you'd have to bet $100 to get $100 back. Another option is a moneyline bet where you're betting on the outcome of a game alone. Since there are still favorites and underdogs, the returns aren't always symmetrical. Let's say the Baltimore Orioles are playing the New York Yankees. The Orioles are the favorite and you'd need to bet $320 to win $100. Some games also have "alternate lines" available. These are custom moneylines that can be wagered on as part of a parlay. Others might see "total" bets where they're betting on the combined score of a game. For example, the Dallas Cowboys and Arizona Cardinals might show two numbers with payout odds. You can also combine multiple bets in a single bet called a parlay. This involves selecting the first bet you'd like to place and then adding another bet to it before hitting "place bet." In betting parlance, one often explores opportunities but is cautious due to unfavorable odds. By pairing a wager with poor prospects, bettors can increase the potential payout. To get started with betting on sports, first pick your sport and then scroll down to find your upcoming game. You'll see three main types of bets: "spread," "moneyline," and "total." If you're looking for more options, check out the "popular" or "promotions" tabs. If you want to make a parlay, which is two bets tied together, you have to do it manually by selecting two different bets in the bet slip. There's no separate tab for parlays. A parlay is when you combine two or more bets into one, but all of them have to win for you to get paid. If you're confident in multiple outcomes, this can be a way to increase your potential payout. To place a parlay on FanDuel, add bets to your betslip and then enter your wager under "two-team parlay" before hitting "place bet". You can also combine multiple parlays into one with Same Game Parlay Plus (SGP+), which is only available occasionally. Prop bets are wagers on specific events happening in a game or event, such as a quarterback throwing for 150 yards. These bets often have high payouts because the odds of them happening are low. You can find prop bets periodically at the top of the app/website or underneath specific games when they're offered. Futures bets involve predicting the outcome of something that will happen in the future, such as a team missing the playoffs or winning the championship. These bets also have high payouts because the odds are extremely low. To place a futures bet, go to the specific sport and look for the "futures" tab at the top. Lastly, you can enter a Round Robin bet, which is like a safer version of a parlay. This allows you to split your wager across multiple outcomes, increasing your chances of winning but reducing the potential payout. 1. Round Robin bets differ from parlays, allowing for separate wins and losses without tying legs together. Select your sport and game in the FanDuel app or desktop site to place a wager. Choose between spread, moneyline, or total bets for common types of betting. For parlays, manually select two different bets in the bet slip. 2. Spread bets involve gambling on a team's final score configuration, where the favorite is minus points and the underdog has plus points. Selecting the correct number of points determines if the favorite wins or loses. Betting amount is shown underneath each spread, with returns calculated via a $100 example. 3. Moneyline bets involve wagering solely on game outcomes without spreads. The return tends to be less symmetrical due to the imbalance between favorites and underdogs. Alternate lines are sometimes available for custom moneylines that can be part of a parlay. 4. Total bets involve gambling on the combined score of a game. This is the third most common type of bet, with returns calculated based on the expected total points scored. FanDuel Betting Options: Over/Under, Parlay, Prop Bets, and Same Game Parlay Plus FanDuel offers various betting options to enhance your gaming experience. Here's an overview of some key features: Over/Under Bet: The over/under bet determines the total points scored in a game. It's also known as a "total" or "over/under" bet. For example, if you select "O 48 -110," you expect both teams to score over 48 points combined and need to wager $110 to win $100. Parlay: A parlay combines two (or more) bets into one. To create a parlay, click "add to betslip" instead of "place bet." You can add multiple bets to the parlay slip before placing your wager. Prop Bets: Prop bets focus on specific events taking place during the game. Examples include a quarterback achieving 150 passing yards or a point guard getting 10 assists in a game. These odds are often slim, and payouts can be high due to their difficulty of winning. Same Game Parlay Plus (SGP+): FanDuel's SGP+ feature allows you to combine multiple parlays into one bet. This increases your potential payout but also amplifies the risk. You'll find an "SGP" indicator in the betslip when this option is available. FanDuel Betting Guide: A Comprehensive Overview of Futures Bets, Round Robin Bets, and Spread Betting Futures bets allow users to predict larger events taking place in the future, with odds often being extremely low. These bets can be found by visiting the specific sport and looking for the "futures" tab at the top. To place a futures bet, select the event you're interested in betting on and choose your stake amount before placing the bet. Round Robin bets are a unique feature offered by FanDuel. This type of bet allows users to add up to 6 separate legs to a single betslip. It is recommended that users avoid Round Robin bets until they are highly confident in their abilities, as these bets can become complex and difficult to manage. For spread betting, choose the sport and game you want to place a wager on, then select one of three types: spread, moneyline, or total. Selecting the "popular" tab or "promotions" tab may also provide additional options. When placing a spread bet, users can gamble on the final score configuration by selecting a specific team to win and cover the spread. The favorite is represented by a minus sign (-), while the underdog has a plus sign (+). Let's say there's a baseball match between the Baltimore Orioles and the New York Yankees, with the Orioles favored to win. FanDuel will show "odds" like "-320" under the Orioles and "+240" under the Yankees. This means that betting $320 on the Orioles would only net you $100, but betting $100 on the Yankees could make you a whopping $240 if they win. Once you pick your bet, click to open the "bet slip." Enter how much you want to wager and select "place bet" to confirm. In some games, you might see "alternate lines" - custom odds that aren't set by FanDuel but can be used in parlays. These are often entered to hedge a riskier bet. One common type of bet is the "total" or "over/under," which refers to the combined score of both teams. For example, if the Dallas Cowboys and Arizona Cardinals are playing, you might see "O 48 -110" and "U 48 -110." If you choose "O 48 -110," it means you think both teams will combine for more than 48 points, requiring a $110 bet to win $100. The "under" option works the same way but with lower odds. When placing an over/under bet, select your choice and enter how much you want to wager before confirming. You can also create a "parlay," which combines two or more bets into one. To parlay, select your first bet, add it to your bet slip, then pick your second bet and add that too. Finally, confirm the amount you want to wager under "two team parlay" before hitting "place bet." This is considered a high-risk, high-reward strategy, often used when gamblers are very confident in their bets but face tough odds. Lastly, there's the option for "prop bets," which don't affect the game's outcome. These unique events might include things like a quarterback throwing over 150 yards or a point guard getting exactly 10 assists. Prop bets appear on FanDuel periodically and often have slim chances of winning, with payout odds starting at $100 to win $800. Given their low probability of success, it's wise to place these bets sparingly. The payouts for prop bets can be very high but come with the challenge of predicting specific events accurately. To maximize potential payouts on FanDuel, consider adding Same Game Parlay Plus (SGP+) to your parlays for a game taking place today or right now. This feature allows combining multiple parlays for increased risk but also potential rewards. Look for the green "SGP" in the betslip to find available bets. For highly confident predictions, SGP+ bets can be used.
