Lily Phillips, a 23-year-old adult content creator, appears vulnerable in never-before-seen footage from her documentary "I Slept With 100 Men in One Day". The behind-the-scenes shots, taken after the 101st encounter, show her visibly distressed and emotional. She had set a record for sleeping with 101 men in one day on OnlyFans, catapulting her to TikTok fame. In the footage, Lily reveals that the experience was 'extremely challenging' and that she struggled with feelings of guilt and disconnection from her partners. Despite her initial enthusiasm for the 'extreme' challenge, she now questions whether it's a suitable career path for women. Lily Phillips, a 23-year-old British adult film actress, sparked controversy worldwide after attempting to break the record for most sex partners in a single day. According to her personal assistant, Claudie-Louis, 200 men were booked to account for potential dropouts. The men were scheduled in hourly shifts from 9 am to 7 pm, allowing only four minutes per participant. She gained self-respect and branded herself 'vile' after receiving little backlash for having sex with 500 men who applied to sleep with her. A few have publicly claimed involvement on social media without facing condemnation. Lily, originally from Derbyshire, started her OnlyFans account at 18 and earned £2,000 in 24 hours doing solo content. She began filming porn with men this year and earns six figures a month from her TikTok videos about sleeping with dozens of men daily. Her popularity stems from her association with Bonnie Blue, who slept with 158 men in two weeks and attracted controversy for sleeping with teenagers. Bonnie's comments on cheating partners sparked a firestorm, while Lily disagrees, stating women shouldn't owe men sex unless they consent to it. She's still got her sights set on bigger challenges, Lily admits, but this time it's not just about fame or fortune - it's the thrill of it all that drives her wild. 'I'd never do something I don't want to do,' she insists, shrugging off speculation that she's in it solely for the money. For those who think she's using OnlyFans as a means to an end, Lily says: 'People can think what they want - that's fine by me.' As a matter of fact, she earned a steady income from her platform before, and only did the 101-man challenge out of enjoyment. Lily approached this endeavour solo, but her assistant Claudie-Louis was instrumental in making it happen. Together, they scheduled an impressive 200 men to account for dropouts - that's right, each guy had just 4 minutes with Lily! 'When she first came to me with the idea, I thought it was either a joke or a publicity stunt,' Claudie-Louis reveals. 'But when I saw how serious she was about it, we had some tough conversations and I concluded that Lily would do this regardless of whether I helped her or not.' Their strategy? Prioritising groups over one-on-ones to get the numbers up faster - after all, a big group can make things happen quickly! They rented an Airbnb with security on hand to ensure Lily's safety, as well as four staff members who handled consent forms and ID checks. Metro brought this activity to Airbnb's attention, but they claim there's no evidence the videos were filmed in their properties. The day of the challenge went something like a conveyor belt: guys would come in, do their thing (well, for some it was just a quick two-minute slot!), and then leave. 'It became a bit of a madhouse towards the end,' Lily laughs, but she made sure to stick to her goals - after all, 100 wouldn't have been enough! The youngest participant was an 18-year-old, while the oldest was in his sixties - not exactly the most age-diverse bunch. And what about safety precautions? Sadly, there's no record of STD testing being required for any of the guys involved. One guy did stand out, though: he requested to be Lily's 100th partner and even performed oral sex on her (and gave her an oily massage, allegedly!). Another man showed up at the last minute to take the total to 101 - talk about dedication! In the end, Lily just wanted to relax with a nice shower and a cup of... well, we won't go there. After a strenuous day, Lily insists she wasn't too worse for wear, but comments under her TikTok videos suggest otherwise. The responses are filled with hate and judgment, concern for her wellbeing, and some criticism of her choices. Many expressed hopes that young women wouldn't view her actions as 'normal behavior,' while others said she should be ashamed or criticized her parents for not supporting her more. Lily disagrees, stating people need to be more open-minded about kink groups and sex parties. She believes these activities shouldn't be shameful and is sad about the backlash she's received. Safe sex is crucial when engaging in erotic activities, and it's essential for individuals to take control of their own sexual health. Dr. Tara, an expert in intimacy and relationships, emphasizes that consensual sex doesn't necessarily equate to emotional intimacy. The porn industry often fails to convey the importance of safe sex practices like using condoms. Condoms can significantly reduce the risk of contracting STIs during casual sex. However, if not used correctly, individuals can still get infected with Chlamydia, Genital herpes, Gonorrhoea, HIV, and Syphilis. Even oral sex without a condom carries risks, especially when there are open sores or cuts in the mouth, genitals, or anus. While some might argue that sex is a personal choice and shouldn't be judged, it's crucial to acknowledge the physical and emotional implications of STIs. Dr. Tara stresses that discussing boundaries, consent, and safe sex practices should be normalized in the porn industry. Sex Influencer Lily Describes Her Experience With 'Sexy Timer' During Sexathon: 'It Makes Me Feel So Bad' Lily, a popular London-based influencer, shared her take on the 'sexy timer' she uses during her sexathons. The device, which she describes as not being like normal sex, makes her feel uncomfortable and guilty. However, she continues to use it as part of her routine. In an interview, Lily explained that before starting each session with a new partner, she engages in some small talk to get them comfortable. Once the timer starts, they quickly move into physical intimacy. Despite this, Lily still feels disconnected from her body during these encounters. Interestingly, despite the frequency and intensity of her sexathons, Lily's private areas do not experience much soreness. Instead, she feels a general fatigue after each session. When asked if she regrets participating in these events, Lily revealed that she plans to continue pushing herself to new limits. In fact, she aims to reach a staggering four-digit number of partners in a single day by February this year. The concept of sexathons and the use of devices like the "sexy timer" has sparked controversy and debate among experts and enthusiasts alike. While some view these practices as empowering and liberating, others see them as exploitative and dehumanizing. In related news, celebrities such as Jason Kelce, Robert Pattinson, Kim Kardashian, and Mila Kunis have shared their own personal experiences and preferences when it comes to intimacy and relationships. Dimitri's openness knows no bounds Mila Kunis revealed her family has an open-door policy at home, which includes the bathroom. She was prompted by her kids' constant requests to enter the house, leading her to say "forget it, just keep the door open." The actress previously admitted she wouldn't have imagined herself having this kind of openness before becoming a mother. Jana revealed a humiliating experience with a past boyfriend who left her "asparagus pee" in the bathroom after she woke up that morning. She shared this embarrassing story, saying she never heard from him again. ELISABETH FINCH, a writer for the ABC medical drama Grey's Anatomy, recently admitted to making a false claim of having bone cancer at 34 years old. This deception led to her placement on administrative leave and eventual resignation. Finch described her actions as "the biggest mistake of my life" and acknowledged that she never actually had cancer. Reality TV star Kim Kardashian seemed willing to try extreme methods for a more youthful appearance, including eating poop, although she clarified that the idea didn't sound terrible enough for her to go through with it fully. She stated she might consider eating just a small amount if told so by someone. Rapper Jelly Roll admitted to having an embarrassing moment during an interview, where he pooped himself in front of an audience and apologized profusely.
