

Click to prove you're human

Ice Spice responded to leaked sex tape rumors on Twitter, calling them "fake ass leaks" and saying people want them to be her so they can masturbate to them. The rapper denied being in the videos, despite some striking similarities with her appearance. Fans have come out in support of Ice Spice, accusing the person who leaked the tapes of invading her privacy. Some users even speculated that the male in the video could be Drake, but there is no concrete evidence to support this claim. This leak comes at a time when Ice Spice's career is booming, with her song "Munch (Feelin' U)" gaining popularity and attracting attention from notable figures like Joe Budden and Symba. Despite this setback, Ice Spice remains unphased and has continued to focus on her music and personal brand. Recently, Drake unfollowed Spice after flying her out to Toronto for OVO Fest. The move sparked a heated debate on social media, with some users poking fun at Spice's alleged sex tape leaks. Despite Spice denying involvement in the leaked videos, others came to her defense, arguing that leaking someone's private content is a violation of their privacy. As Ice Spice's popularity continues to grow, she has been increasingly booked for shows and performances. However, her newfound fame has also brought increased scrutiny, with some users mocking her recent performances at events like Rolling Loud New York and a concert in Houston.