Most popular US online retailers do not allow Canadians to purchase items and have them shipped to a PO box in the US. However, there are ways around this issue for those looking to buy from these sites. One approach is to use a US Shop & Ship Program, which acts as an intermediary between the buyer and seller, handling logistics like shipping and payment processing. These services typically charge a fee for their convenience. A more cost-effective option for those in Canada is to shop in-store at US retailers. However, with border restrictions currently in place due to COVID-19, this solution is not feasible for now. Another technique involves adding a secondary address to a Canadian credit card. This allows the credit card company to recognize the billing address used for transactions on foreign websites, potentially bypassing some of the restrictions imposed by online retailers. Some users have reported success with this method using virtual private networks (VPNs) or having friends in the US order items and pay for them via PayPal. However, not all merchants allow this workaround, and some credit card processors are particularly strict about their rules. In such cases, obtaining a US-based credit card may be necessary to complete purchases on certain websites. Some users have had success using Canadian credit cards with secondary addresses in the past but acknowledge that there are exceptions and varying degrees of compatibility across different retailers and credit card companies. It is also worth noting that some shipping forwarders, like usgobuy, offer their services for a fee, potentially providing another alternative for those looking to shop from US retailers. To obtain a US billing address, you need to follow these steps: Firstly, take your postal code and add a 00 or 01 to the end. For example, M0M 3V5 becomes 63501. Then, use Google to find a corresponding USA address for this 5-digit zip code. You can search for "Missouri" with the added zip code to find a suitable physical address. This US address can be used as your billing address, and you can pay for the item using this address. Okay, the user wants me to paraphrase the given article text using one of the three methods: adding spelling errors, mimicking a non-native speaker, or increasing burstiness. Let me first understand the content of the article. It's about using a fake billing address in Iowa for a TD credit card to bypass a system that only accepts US addresses, while it didn't work for RBC. There are some discussions about zip codes and how this trick works for some retailers but not others. Now, I need to decide which method to use. Since the user mentioned probabilities, I should randomly pick one. Let me check the probabilities again: 40% for SE, 30% for NNES, 30% for IB. Let's go with SE (spelling errors) for this example. Wait, but I need to make sure the spelling errors are occasional and not too disruptive. Let me go through the text and introduce a few minor errors. For instance, "Iowa" could become "Iowaa", "address" might be "adres", and "trick" could be "trik". Also, check for other words where a single letter change would make it look like a typo but still readable. I should also ensure that the meaning remains intact. For example, "NOTE: This trick did NOT work on an RBC credit card but it DID work on a TD card." might become "NOTE: This trick did NOT work on an RBC credit card but it DID work on a TD card." Wait, that's the same. Maybe change "trick" to "trik" and "address" to "adres". Let me go through each line and apply the changes. Another part: "What TD card did it work on?" could be "What TD card did it work on?" No error there. Maybe "Jul 1st, 2024 5:04 pm" could be "Jul 1st, 2024 5:04 pm" - no change. Maybe "home depot, best buy or target" could be "home depot, best buy or target" - no. Maybe "retailers" to "retailers" - no. Wait, maybe "retailers" could be "retailers" - not helpful. Let me pick a few words. For example, "trick" becomes "trik", "address" becomes "adres", "trick" again in another place. Also, "HST" might be "HST" - no. Maybe "cheaper" becomes "cheaper" - no. Hmm, maybe "HST" should be "HST" - no. I think I need to be more careful. Let me go through each sentence and apply a few spelling errors. For example, Original: "What TD card did it work on?" Paraphrased: "What TD card did it work on?" - maybe change "work" to "worke". Original: "I used this trick to add my Canadian credit card to my USA PayPal accounts." Paraphrased: "I used this trick to add my Canadian credit card to my USA PayPal accounts." - maybe "add" becomes "adde". Original: "The sale starts at Dec 1st 9pm EST." Paraphrased: "The sale starts at Dec 1st 9pm EST." - maybe "starts" becomes "start". Wait, but the user might not want too many errors. Let me pick a few key points. Maybe change "trick" to "trik" in the first instance, "address" to "adres", and "work" to "worke". Also, "retailers" to "retailers" - no. Maybe "HST" to "HST" - no. I think I need to ensure that the errors are minor and not affecting the overall meaning. Let me proceed with that approach. Paraphrased Text (Spelling Errors Applied): "Wha TD card did it worke on? Iowaa, a fake adres was used for a TD credit card to bypass a system that only accepts US adreses. It did NOT worke on an RBC card, but it DID worke on a TD card. NOTE: This trick did NOT worke on an RBC credit card but it DID worke on a TD card. Some users shared their experienes, like using a similar approach for a few large retails in the US like home depot, best buy or target. There was one time it did NOT worke with a smaller retails and the retails canceled their order. Maybe US CC processors are less strinct? Not sure why it worke but I'm glad it does because I used this trick to add my Canadian credit card to my USA PayPal accounts. Dec 1st, 2024 11:22 am BanditKeith [OP] Sr. Member...
