For those interested in Tate McRae's music, her recent video "It's OK I'm OK" pays homage to iconic pop stars like Britney Spears and The Pussycat Dolls. With her impressive choreography and catchy tunes, Tate has drawn comparisons to Britney, an honor she acknowledges. Laroi shared some cute selfies with his girlfriend Tate. During a show in Dublin, Laroi invited everyone to sing along to a song, saying he didn't want to look silly because his girlfriend was there. One fan recorded Tate laughing off to the side while Laroi tried to get the crowd involved. Laroi joked that if they weren't singing loudly enough, it would be embarrassing. However, they didn't make their relationship public until July when they were spotted getting cozy at the 2024 MTV Video Music Awards. Tate McRae is a Canadian singer and dancer who rose to fame at just 13 years old after becoming the first Canadian finalist on So You Think You Can Dance. Born on July 1, 2003, in Calgary, Alberta, she has been actively pursuing her passion for dance since childhood. McRae's success in dance competitions led to her being named Canada's favorite dancer and earning multiple awards, including Best Female Dancer at the 2015 Dance Awards. She gained notoriety by speaking the role of "Spot Splatler Splash" in the Lalaloopsy series since its premiere in 2013. McRae was later invited to serve as a brand ambassador for Capezio and became a finalist for the National Gala of the New York City Dance Alliance in 2014. In addition to her dance career, McRae has also made a name for herself as a singer-songwriter. She launched her YouTube channel in 2011 and began creating original music with her "Create With Tate" series. Her debut song, "One Day," received over 32 million views on YouTube and prompted her to self-release the song. Throughout her career, McRae has won numerous awards, including Best Female Dancer at the 2018 Dance Awards in Las Vegas. She was discovered by RCA Records in 2019 and released her first EP, All The Things I Never Said, in January 2020.
