The One Piece Card Game is rapidly expanding, and having knowledge of card rarities can help protect collections or separate them by value. Cards are marked with a small letter/s at the bottom right corner. Common cards have a 'C', are the most basic cards in packs, and come in large quantities, making them less valuable. Uncommon cards (UC) appear less frequently and are slightly more valuable than common ones. Rare one-piece cards are foil cards, easily identifiable by an 'R' at the bottom right corner. Packs usually contain 1 rare card or a better pull. Super Rare cards (SR) have shiny silver borders, are staples with unique mechanics, and appear in every few packs. Their value depends on playability. Secret cards (SEC) have golden borders and textures; they're more difficult to obtain than other cards. Leader cards dictate deck play style, marked by a 'L' or red card back. Don cards are resource cards with the same text: "Your Turn +1000". They appear in every pack, have white official backs, and some sealed booster boxes contain special illustrations. One Piece alt art cards showcase interesting designs and illustrations, appearing in each set. One Piece Trading Card Game Rarities and Valuable Cards There are over 20 parallel cards in the One Piece Trading Card Game, which have the same markings as common cards but with unique alt card designs. These alternate art cards are highly valuable and can be found in every English booster box. The rarest and most valuable cards are the manga cards, which feature a unique manga style background from iconic moments in the One Piece manga. Manga cards are extremely hard to pull and can sell for up to $1000 on secondary markets at release dates. The actual card text is the same as the secret rare card, but the manga card is mainly meant for high-end collectors. The One Piece Card Game has gained popularity since its launch on December 22, 2022, but can be confusing due to its seven rarity symbols: C (common), UC (uncommon), R (rare), L (leader), SR (super rare), SEC (secret rare), and SP (special rare). C cards are easy to find in booster packs and work well with more powerful cards for combos. They also support other card types. UC cards, like common ones, can be found frequently but are not the most impressive. Rare cards have foil and the R symbol, found at a rate of one per pack or two if no rarer is drawn. Leader Cards are uniquely colored red and serve as deck strategy foundations. SR cards pull at 1 in 24 packs, while SEC cards are difficult to find due to only one secret rare per booster box. SP cards have the SP symbol before set numbers and are built into decks in smaller numbers. One Piece Card Game Rarities Explained The One Piece Card Game offers various artworks, such as wanted posters, derived from the card they originate from. The pull rate for Alternate Art cards is around 1 per case or 288 packs. Alternate Art cards are rare and difficult to find, with a pull rate of approximately 2 in every booster box or 1 in 12 packs. These cards have limited unique characteristics as they are derived from Rare, Leader, Super Rare, or Secret Rare Cards. Manga Rare is the rarest card in One Piece, featuring scenes from the manga in the background. With only one card in every set, its pull rate is low, speculating to be around 1 in 2 to 6 cases or 1 in 24 to 72 booster boxes. The rarity of Manga Rare is extremely high, with prices reaching at least $500 due to its difficulty to pull. A single booster pack can cost up to $22, making the value of a Manga Rare card over $12,700 to $38,000. Common Cards offer staples in decks with sometimes interesting effects, while Uncommon Cards provide support and show up frequently in decks. Rare Cards contain powerful abilities and combo powers, but their scarcity makes them harder to build around. Super Rare Cards are the most powerful, appearing in smaller numbers or as a single card to back a deck's strategy. Secret Rares often have alternate art versions of other cards and feature lavish illustrations, making them highly desirable and valuable among collectors. One Piece Card Game Leader Cards and Rare Findings Looking for a rare card find in the booster pack can be exciting due to the low occurrence of Secret Rares at one per 24 packs. The game utilizes leader cards which dominate deck strategy, distinguishing them from other cards with red-backed designs separating these cards from standard decks, not allowing them to be shuffled into the deck. Leader cards are found throughout packs and typically comprise 12 cards per booster box of 24 packs. DON!! cards are common but rare variant versions exist with alternate art, which can also include white-back designs. DON!! cards have a universal function stating 'Your Turn +1000' regardless of their artwork or rarity level. Rare cards such as alternate art variants and Manga special edition cards can be found at a rate of one per 12 packs. These are extremely rare and highly sought after, often selling for high prices on secondary markets. For beginners, it is recommended to first read our best One Piece Card Game starter decks guide and then familiarize yourself with the various sets and their new elements through the game's sets list. Lastly, checking out our most valuable One Piece cards list will give you insight into the rarity and price value of certain cards in the game. Commons, Uncommons, and Rares are types of cards found in the One Piece Card Game. Other rare cards include Secret Rare, Leader, and Super Rare cards. The rarity is indicated by a two-letter code at the bottom right corner of each card. Common cards, denoted as C, are staples that make up many decks. They may not be powerful but have interesting effects that help with combos. Uncommon cards, denoted as UC, are less common than Commons but still frequent in booster packs. Rare cards, denoted as R, have a foil treatment and can be challenging to find. However, building multiple copies of Rare or Super Rare cards is possible through online marketplaces or specialized stores. Secret Rares in the One Piece Card Game are rare cards that exceed the set's numbering. They often have alternate art versions of common cards, but are valued for their lavish illustrations. In contrast to Super Rares, Secret Rares do not have a separate rarity indicator; instead, they follow the set's numbering. These cards are scarce and can be found in booster packs only once every 24 packs. Leader Cards, which form the deck's strategy, are unique with red backs and usually appear in every other pack. DON!! cards are common but rare variants exist with alternate art. Alternate art cards have new illustrations and textures, appearing at a rate of 1 in every 12 booster packs. Manga alternate art cards are extremely rare and valuable, often selling for high prices on secondary marketplaces.
