To set up a Gmail account, create a Google Account. This will allow you to sign in to various Google services like YouTube, Google Play, and Google Drive using your username and password. Important: Before setting up a new account, ensure you've signed out of your current one. Learn how to do this. To begin the process, go to the Google Account sign-in page on your device and click "Create account." Then, select whether the account is for personal use, child, work, or business purposes. Follow the on-screen instructions to set up your account. Tip: If you're looking to use Gmail for professional purposes, consider a Google Workspace account instead of a personal one. This will provide increased storage, professional email addresses, and additional features. Learn more about Google Workspace pricing and plans. If the username you've chosen is already taken or too similar to an existing one, you won't be able to create the account. Similarly, Gmail won't allow the creation of usernames that are reserved by Google to prevent spam or abuse. Note: If someone has created a Gmail address impersonating your identity, unfortunately, Gmail cannot mediate disputes involving third parties.
