Continue

Guide to online betting

Three-Way Moneyline Betting Explained A three-way moneyline bet is a type of wager that involves three options: Team A to win, Team B to win, or for the event to end in a tie. This type of betting is commonly used in sports where the result may end in a tie, such as soccer and hockey. In soccer, matches are decided after full-time, and ties are extremely common due to the lower-scoring nature of the game. As a result, three-way moneyline betting is the most standard and popular way to bet on soccer matches. Three-way moneylines offer more value to bettors than traditional moneyline bets because there are three options to choose from, making it harder to accurately predict an outcome. Oddsmakers primarily employ three-way moneyline bets in hockey as well, due to the high number of ties that occur in games. When betting on a soccer match, you can choose to bet on either Team A or Team B to win, or on a draw (tie). The option of a draw is listed in the same way as choosing either team as the outright victor. However, if the side you select to win does so after regular time, your bet will be graded as a loss. In hockey, three-way moneylines are also commonly used, especially during standard league games. However, some tournament-style matches may extend into extra time and possibly into penalties, which can affect how three-way moneyline bets are graded. Overall, three-way moneyline betting provides more options for bettors to choose from, making it a popular choice in sports where ties are common. Given article text here The outcome of a game can be decided in different ways, including overtime or a shootout. If you pick the winning team, whether it's after three periods, during overtime, or through a shootout, then you win. There are two types of moneyline bets: standard and three-way. The main difference between them is that three-way moneyline eliminates overtime from the wager. This means you're only betting on the outcome at the end of three periods. In this game, Vegas is still the favorite, but in the three-way option, odds for both teams are longer. If you choose either team as an outright winner in a three-way moneyline, you'll see a better return than in the standard two-way moneyline. However, if your chosen team wins in overtime or during a shootout, the bet is over. Three-way moneylines aren't always safe bets, but they can offer superior value. For those looking to expand their betting options and learn more about sports betting terms and strategies, there are numerous guides available on Odds Shark's website. Online sports betting in the UK has become a massive industry with customers flocking to websites for a wide variety of sports. Our guide aims to break down the process into manageable chunks, from signing up to placing a bet online with safe and legal bookmakers. First things first, do your research on what type of experience you're looking for - established operators or new betting sites with specialisations in specific sports like football or horse racing. Don't forget to check out sign-up bonuses, often including free bets, which can maximise your rewards. Here's a step-by-step guide to signing up: 1. Choose a reputable bookmaker from our recommendations. 2. Enter personal details on the registration page, creating a username and password in the process. 3. Thoroughly read and accept terms and conditions to understand your rights and how the betting company works. 4. Depending on the bookmaker, you may be asked to verify identity with documentation, which can take up to two days. To make deposits, use payment methods like debit cards or e-wallets like PayPal. Be aware that certain methods might exclude sign-up bonuses or require a minimum deposit to unlock welcome offers. Start placing bets, including qualifying bets for the sign-up offer. For beginners, horse racing betting is an excellent place to start after creating an online account at one of the top horse racing betting sites. Find the relevant section, select a race, and back your chosen horse. Don't worry if it seems daunting - we've broken down common betting odds in a separate article. How to Bet on Horses: A Comprehensive Guide This guide details everything you need to know about punting on horses, including how to place bets for the Grand National. When major events like Cheltenham, the Grand National, and Royal Ascot take place, bookmakers usually offer various promotions and special deals. The odds for these events tend to be published well in advance. Similar to horse racing, betting on football offers a wide range of options and variety when it comes to types of bets. The top football betting sites feature numerous betting markets with competitive odds along with exciting promotions based on the sport. To place a bet on football, simply select the football section from your chosen bookmaker's website, find the match you want to wager on, pick one of the available markets, and place your bet. For example, ante post betting involves placing wagers on the outcome of a league or tournament before it begins, while match betting focuses on specific matches. Some popular football betting options include: * Full-time result: A simple bet on the game's outcome, choosing between a home/away win or a draw. * Correct score: Place a bet on the exact score of the game, with winnings awarded if your prediction is correct. * Half time/full time: This involves selecting the result at half-time and full-time, such as a draw at half-time and a team's win at full-time. Other popular options include over/under bets, where you guess whether a match event will be above or below a number selected by the bookie. This can apply to goals, corners, cards, or even passes. In addition to standard betting options, bet builder sites and accumulator betting sites offer different types of bets that could potentially yield bigger returns. A bet builder combines selections from a single football match into one bet, while an accumulator combines several bets from different games into one multi-bet. Outside of horse racing and football, other popular sports for online betting include golf and tennis. Promotions and offers tend to appear on golf and tennis betting sites when big events like the Masters or Wimbledon take place. To bet on these sports, simply follow the same rules as above: find the sport's section on your chosen bookmaker's website, pick a market, select a wager, and place your bet. In-play betting has become increasingly popular in recent years due to live streaming capabilities, allowing users to place bets while an event is occurring. In-play betting markets usually offer various options, with odds different from pre-event prices, providing the chance to find value on the market. This type of betting allows users to adapt to situations as they develop during the selected event. Lastly, cash out betting sites give customers additional control throughout a match or event. Cash out is a tool used by bookmakers, offering users a sum of money early to settle their bet ahead of the event. Punters can now lock in early profits or cut losses while the game is still on, thanks to flexible wagering options.Online betting has become increasingly popular due to numerous offers and promotions run by betting sites. Sign-up bonuses often reward customers with free bets, but these come with restrictions.New and existing customers can enjoy free bets through bet-and-get offers, where a qualifying wager unlocks the free bet. Bookmakers also offer enhanced odds on high-profile football games and other benefits like money-back specials and extra places in horse racing.Betting sites that attract the most users continuously update their promotions to keep customers engaged. Online betting has overtaken traditional high street shops as people can place bets from anywhere with an internet connection, saving time and increasing convenience.Various payment options are available online, including e-wallet methods like Apple Pay and Google Pay, making it easier to deposit funds.PayPal betting sites offer lower deposit amounts and instant deposits. Online bookmakers provide greater flexibility with in-play betting options, loyalty schemes, rewards, and constant promotions.Betting apps and live streaming have further enhanced the online experience, allowing customers to watch events in real-time.The opportunity to collect partial winnings or cash out early is available on many online platforms, but not in traditional shops. Betting online is not a reliable way to make money and should be treated as a form of entertainment only. Even if you have knowledge about sports, it's still possible to lose bets. To avoid financial issues, always keep control over your budget when registering with bookmakers or signing up for UK casinos. Make sure to stick to a budget and don't chase losses by placing excessive stakes. This applies not just to betting sites but also to casino sites, slot sites, poker sites, and other forms of gambling. Don't get caught up in free bet offers or casino promotions without thinking twice about them. If you're struggling with gambling-related problems, there are several charities and healthcare providers that offer support, including NHS Help, GambleAware, and Gamblers Anonymous. Our website may earn commissions from links to online betting sites, but this doesn't influence our content. We aim to provide unbiased information to help fund journalism across The Independent. Note: This article is intended for entertainment purposes only and should not be used to make any actual bets or wagers. Be aware of the laws and regulations regarding online gambling in your jurisdiction before participating in any betting activities. Wagers on remaining rounds remain standing unless a contest finishes before the scheduled number of rounds due to an accidental injury, in which case all wagers are void. If the winner is decided by judges' scorecards, round wagers will be losers. For "Will the Fight Go the Distance" markets, a change in scheduled rounds makes this market void. You're wagering on how your selected fighter will win the fight. Accidental fouls during the first four rounds result in all wagers being void unless the judges' scorecards are used to determine an official winner. Intentional fouls causing injury and resulting in the fight being stopped later will have the injured boxer declared the winner by technical decision if ahead on the scorecards, or a draw if behind or even. Round wagers settle as wins by decision if the fight ends via technical decision. Results are based on the official result at ringside, except for technical draws due to accidental injury or foul. Wagers stand unless an official or unofficial sanctioning body overturns the fight decision, or if there's a "no contest" declaration, with the exception of wagers where the outcome has already been determined. If a boxer substitution occurs, wagers on the original contest are void. Changes in how a contest is advertised will not affect wagers. The terms for specific wagers may change due to a scheduled number of rounds being altered, unless the rounds for certain bets are cancelled. For instance, if a fight is moved from 12 rounds to 10 rounds, bets on rounds 11 and 12 will be forfeit.

How to place a bet online. Online betting guides. Online betting me uk. How to play online gambling. How to promote online gambling website. Guide to online sports betting. Beginners guide to online sports betting.