The British singer Gabrielle, born Louise Gabrielle Bobb, has had a successful music career spanning over two decades. She was born in Hackney, London, and released her first album in 1993. Her debut single "Dreams" reached number one on the UK charts, making it a historic achievement for a solo female artist at that time. Some of Gabrielle's notable songs include: - Rise - Give Me a Little More Time - If You Ever (feat. East 17) - Walk on By - Out of Reach - Sunshine In an interview with Smooth's Famous Firsts podcast, Gabrielle talked about how she got her stage name. She explained that when she was young, she would often ask her mom why she had a middle name if she couldn't use it. Her mom suggested using her middle name at school, but Gabrielle thought it sounded pretentious. Gabrielle started performing at a club called Moonlighting on Greek Street, where a booking agent named Lady Carol referred to her as "Gabrielle." The singer liked this name because it allowed her to use her middle name without having to create a new one. Although she still gets called both Gabrielle and Louise, many people know her by the nickname "Gabs" or "Gabby Gabs." Gabrielle has a condition called ptosis that causes her eyelid to droop slightly. However, she covers her eye for confidence reasons rather than due to any health issues. The singer has one son named Jordan, who is in his early 20s. His father, Tony Antoniou, left Gabrielle shortly after their child's birth and was later jailed for killing his stepfather with an accomplice in 1995.
