The sex worker built her brand on collaborating with 'barely legal' teens and taking their virginity, but denied allegations that she's a sexual predator in a UK-first interview last year. Recently, multiple videos showed Bonnie looking for men to sleep with her on January 11, the day she allegedly broke the record. In a Q&A after completing the challenge, she said: 'Probably down there... I don't need a wheelchair... I am fine, it just feels like I've had a heavy day in the bedroom — which is exactly what I've had.' While the sheer amount of men participating is shocking enough, the news comes as a blow to fellow sex worker Lily Phillips who had been planning to break the same record. The unofficial record was previously held by adult film star Lisa Sparks for 21 years, after she slept with 919 men at an event in Poland. Lily, 24, had previously worked with Bonnie creating adult content, before becoming known for sleeping with 101 men in a single day. Despite being filmed in floods of tears following her feat, she planned to have sex with 1,000 men in a day next month — but Bonnie has now pipped her to the post. Bonnie thanked the participants saying: '1,057 isn't possible without volunteers... thanks for the fluids.' She expressed gratitude, stating that if it wasn't for the participants, she wouldn't have any of this and that it really has changed her life. A representative from Bonnie's team confirmed to Metro that the stunt took place, which was attended by a major UK TV network releasing a documentary on the sex worker's feat. 'Bonnie is wiped out so we're letting her rest,' the spokesperson added. Another sex worker, Annie Knight, who was banned from Fiji alongside Bonnie, congratulated her on breaking the record writing: 'GO GIRL.' Bonnie earns six figures a month from selling her adult content, and continues to rage bait viewers by using language such as 'barely legal' and 'barely breathing' - in order to profit off more clicks. More Trending The outrage has been full-throated, with critics branding her an 'abuser' in angry social media comments. However, Bonnie claims she has never slept with anyone under 18, making her potential suitors bring ID with them and even breathalysing them to make sure they aren't intoxicated when signing consent forms to be filmed while having sex. She told Metro: 'If we're saying 18 is too young to consent then they need to change the law. If the law is 18, I'm going to abide by it. If they change it to 21, I'll up it to 21, so when people have an issue with that, they're putting their problems on me. If you don't agree with it being 18, go to parliament. Nor is it made for the middle-aged women that give me a lot of the hate — it's for your husbands and your sons.' Do you have a story to share? Get in touch by emailing MetroLifestyleTeam@Metro.co.uk.
