He served in the US military before joining the police academy to gain more action-oriented work. His love for firearms is evident, but he struggles with the difference between military and civilian life. Tackleberry's relationship with his mother is significant, as she gave him his signature firearm. This connection is revisited throughout the series, often through his interactions with Mrs. Lois Feldman, a senior citizen who reminds him of his mother. Throughout the films, Tackleberry showcases his skills, but also has a tendency to be overzealous and trigger-happy. His actions often result in excessive force being used, although he typically manages to achieve justice. In addition to his police work, Tackleberry is also known for playing the saxophone well. The character's personal life is explored in later films, revealing that he was a virgin at 28 years old. This secret is eventually revealed to his partner, Sgt. Kathleen Kirkland, with whom he falls in love and gets married. Their son, Eugene Jr., inherits his parents' enthusiasm for firearms and police work. Tackleberry's arsenal typically includes heavy sidearms, such as the .44 Magnum, and he uses military slang and equipment in his work. His catchphrase, "NOW, Mister!", is often used to intimidate or command attention. Despite his tough exterior, Tackleberry has a benevolent nature, wishing to resolve situations peacefully whenever possible. However, he can become selfish when given the opportunity to test new firearms, as seen in the Annual Police Display in Miami. ==========Tackleberry uses his bazooka to put the missing dot on the 'i' of the 'police academy' sign after Mahoney remarked it was missing; the collapsing screen serving as transition to the start of the episode. Another example is when working an undercover job as an ice cream salesman, he loads ice cream into his bazooka to cover the escaping crooks in a mess. ========== ========== Zed's eccentric personality was on full display in various roles, from Family Affair's dramatic crying fits to Mickey Mouse Watcher. His immature antics, such as reciting a playground rhyme at a formal poetry reading, were showcased in his mischievous nature. When Zed's gang caused chaos at an anti-crime fair sponsored by the Mayor, he surprisingly thanked her for the "great bargains" and told her he voted for her. In the second film, Zed's transformation began as he joined the police force, with Sweetchuck by his side. They navigated their friendship despite occasional clashes, eventually becoming close companions. Notable was Zed's unusual ability to resist tear gas and his potent bad breath, which proved more effective than any firearm. In the fourth film, Zed fell in love with Laura from Citizens on Patrol, a significant departure from his previous persona. Family members made appearances in both films, including Auntie Bertha, Ed, Ned, and his parents. Zed's surname was McGlunk, and his name was mentioned as Jughead during an undercover operation. Zed's companions, Conklin and Hooks, also underwent character development. Conklin joined the academy under the COP program before becoming a full-time cop, often working with Sweetchuck. He appeared in both films and shared scenes with Zed. Marion Ramsey voiced Hooks, who was known for her soft-spoken demeanor but became assertive when pushed to her limit. She could be aggressive, using phrases like "Don't move, dirt bag!" during confrontations. The phrase is believed to have originated from the Police Academy's training under Lieutenant Harris. Law Enforcement Women in the Police Academy Franchise ========== Hooks is portrayed as a skilled artist who uses her talent for sketching. She is also shown to be assertive when addressing an attorney's infractions. In the animated series and films, Hooks works with Hightower and demonstrates her expertise as a law enforcement officer. Played by: Leslie Easterbrook Voiced by: Denise Pidgeon Callahan is known for her physical appearance, which provides comedic relief in the series. A more mature version of Tackleberry, Callahan is depicted as a strict and dominant figure in the police academy. Callahan teaches self-defense techniques to cadets, often putting them through rigorous tests. She has relationships with other characters, including Cadet Martin and Nogata. Callahan partners with Tackleberry and later becomes captain, showcasing her leadership skills. In the animated series, she appears alongside Hightower, demonstrating her ability to work effectively in a team. Callahan is also portrayed as an athlete, engaging in weightlifting and martial arts training. Her singing voice is showcased in several episodes. Throughout the franchise, Callahan remains a central figure, demonstrating her commitment to law enforcement and her unique approach to solving problems. Nephew of Eric Lassard, Nick is a skilled officer who assumes the role of lead prankster and womanizer. He appears alongside Mahoney and shows his gymnastics skills, escaping injury by swinging on an overpass. As District Attorney, Nick proves himself to be a capable leader in a different field. Eric Lassard serves as Commandant of the Metropolitan Police Academy, initially avoiding politics. When faced with challenges from Chief Hurst and Lieutenant Harris, he remains neutral and focused on his duties.Thaddeus Harris Quickly Dismisses Comments, Then Initiates COP Program ========== Mister Nasty Inherited Proctor ---------- A few years later, Thaddeus Harris starts a program called Citizens on Patrol (COP), which is a community outreach course. Lassard appears in all seven films and is often portrayed as benevolent yet clueless. He loves his pet goldfish and gives long, optimistic speeches about the future of the academy. Mister Nasty - Thaddeus Harris ---------- Harris is a sergeant who always tries to discredit Lassard and his men. However, he ends up being the butt of most jokes. Starting with Police Academy 4, he inherits Proctor from Mauser. He seems to be success-driven but hurts Lassard's feelings in the process. Move It - Thaddeus Harris ---------- Harris has a catchphrase: "Move it! Move it! Move it!". He is afraid of heights and derives pleasure from tormenting his subordinates. Despite this, he genuinely wants graduates to become good cops. Mister Nasty's Change of Heart ---------- In the seventh movie, Harris joins Lassard's team during a rescue attempt. He even trusts Tackleberry by asking him to shoot a locator bullet into a bad guy's car. Captain Harris and Proctor ---------- Harris works with Proctor in four, five, and six films. In the animated series, he is portrayed as gruff but not sadistic. He also seems to take out his dislike on Mahoney through red tape rather than direct action. Proctor - Thaddeus Harris's Sidekick ---------- Carl Proctor is a gullible sidekick who supports Mauser in Police Academy 2 and 3, then works with Harris in four, five, and six. He dislikes Mahoney and his friends and helps discredit them.The lovable but hapless Proctor is often the target of pranks and slapstick stunts, including being lifted by crane while inside an outhouse and placed onto a sports field. When he hears the national anthem, he stands up immediately, shocking those around him. Unlike his counterpart Harris, Proctor tends to be nicer and follows orders, although he usually manages to mess things up. Proctor's childlike attitude in adult situations is also notable, as seen in instances where he mistakes a bar for a seafood restaurant or asks for a green umbrella at a bartender. This innocence often leads him to be more forgiving towards Mahoney and his friends, unlike Harris, who appears to take great pleasure in playing pranks on them. In Police Academy 5, it is revealed that Proctor is related to Harris through marriage, adding another layer to their complex relationship. The two also appear together in the animated series, where Proctor is briefly promoted to Acting Captain due to Harris' hospitalization. Mauser, a similar character to Harris, is portrayed as ruthless and demanding, often serving as the butt of jokes played by Lassard's men. His lackey, Proctor, appears alongside him in Police Academy 2 and 3. Mauser's story takes a different turn in the animated series, where he becomes a more well-liked character and heads the K9 Corps. Barbara, an overweight guy who struggles to stand up for himself, is frequently targeted by bullies in his first film appearance. He joins the police academy with a burning desire for revenge but eventually finds himself subjected to intimidation from Blankes and Copeland. Despite this, Barbara's lovable nature often shines through, making him a memorable character. ==========Barbara's confrontation with the bullies ultimately turned out to be a sweet revenge. During the city riot at the end of the film, Barbara was finally able to face his tormentors and put them in their place. After fending off the gang, he demanded that they return the furniture they had taken from the truck and leave. The ringleader, who claimed ownership of the furniture, was forced to admit that they were actually moving away from town due to the riot. Barbara's smile as he walked away, muttering "Oh, sorry," hinted at a sense of satisfaction in having finally stood up for himself. Meanwhile, Chad Copeland and Blankes often found themselves at odds with Mahoney and the other officers. As cadet leaders chosen by Harris, they were tasked with spying on Mahoney's group to get them off the force and discredit them. However, their own ineptitude and arrogance often led to their downfall. In one instance, Copeland was tricked into going to the Blue Oyster Bar by Mahoney, missing the party at the beach. Later, he and Blankes were forced to flee from rioters after their revolvers were stolen, leading them to accidentally stumble upon the Blue Oyster Bar once again. Blankes, like Proctor, was also a spy who wanted to ensure that Lassard's men were eliminated and discredited. Along with Copeland, he helped Mauser in his scheme to humiliate Lassard's academy as revenge for graduating at the bottom of their class. Their plan to sabotage Hooks' GPS by turning it into a game of Paperboy was eventually foiled when Hooks caught on quickly. Unbeknownst to them, she and Cadet Fackler were using secret coded words to help Mahoney and the others reach the Governor before Mauser did. In the end, Blankes and Copeland were knocked out with one double-punch by Hooks. He gets into trouble after saying racial insult enough to flip Copeland inside car despite pleas from Harris and Hooks. ========== He stays with Metropolitan Police and tries sabotage academy under Mauser guidance, even though his antics got found out by Sgt. Hooks and Fackler but still he is on force. ========== He thinks police beat should be strict like Captain Harris' attitude and antagonizes people, he was like Proctor who spies for Lassard's men to be kicked off force. ========== He gets fooled into gay bar The Blue Oyster often and appears in first third fourth films as well as animated series episode "Proctor Call Doctor" and cameo episode Grads On Tour. ========== He faints after Barbara hits him with lunch tray near end of first movie, he got double punched by Hooks later to pay back for insult about her. ========== He evolves from an intolerant attitude to acceptance and wisdom over time, enabling him to discern genuine intentions from those who are insincere, particularly Captains Mauser and Harris. While not present in the animated series, he is replaced by another police chief. In the live-action episode "Cadet of the Year", Commissioner Hurst assumes command of the Police Academy due to budget cuts. Bud, Kathleen's younger brother, enjoys boxing and was a high school champion. He appears as a cadet in subsequent films, opposing his father joining C.O.P. because it may be perceived as favoritism with three family members in law enforcement. His father believes Bud is hesitant due to concerns that he cannot 'cut it'. Andrew Paris, the real-life son of actor Jerry Paris, plays this character. Kathleen Tackleberry marries Eugene, a gun enthusiast with authoritarian tendencies. They have a son, Eugene Jr., who shares their affinity for firearms. Captain Pete Lassard, brother of Commander Eric Lassard and possibly Sgt. Nick Lassard, serves as captain of the 16th Precinct. He is dedicated to making the city safer, but faces challenges due to budget cuts and outdated squad members. George Martin appears only in the first film, initially presenting himself as a Hispanic heartthrob with a charm for attracting women. However, he reveals his true American accent and heritage by the end of the movie. He becomes involved with Callahan. Tomoko, a Japanese cadet, is initially part of Mauser's group but is sent to Lassard's academy due to his uniqueness.The movie follows Carey Mahoney, a police officer who becomes embroiled in a series of misadventures with his colleagues at the Academy. ========== The Mayor/Mastermind, played by Ron Perlman, is a cunning and skilled individual who takes a calculated approach to his crimes, often using humor to distract his opponents. He hires three bumbling henchmen with unique abilities and creates elaborate plans for small-time robberies, all while hiding his involvement. When he's introduced as the Mayor, he's furious about the recent robbery and reprimands Harris for his precinct's slow response, showing his cunning and manipulative nature. Under pressure from the governor to stop the crime wave, the Mayor reluctantly teams up with Commandant Lassard and his team. Throughout the story, Mastermind uses various tactics, including hijacking a power utility truck and attempting to kill Lassard in creative ways. Eventually, he's caught and arrested, confessing to his scam and Harris' unwitting involvement as his informant.Moses Hightower, a towering figure at the police academy, hid his gentle side behind a façade of strength and intimidation. ========== He had traded in his life as a florist for one of superhuman might, but despite his intimidating presence, Hightower struggled with self-doubt. His massive frame belied a soft-spoken demeanor, often causing him to stumble over his words. Nevertheless, he practiced driving by ripping out car seats and steering from the back seat, showcasing his incredible strength. However, this gentle giant was not without his vices. He would occasionally lose control and break things or use force to get what he wanted. This was evident when he turned over a squad car with Copeland inside after being insulted by Hooks' friend. Despite this, Hightower proved himself to be a hero, saving Harris from a gunman and earning a decoration for bravery. Throughout the series, Hightower's character evolved, showcasing his softer side. In one instance, he nearly lost control when almost injured, but only then did he acknowledge feeling angry. He also demonstrated his loyalty as a dog handler, often seen with German Shepherd police dogs by his side. In the animated series, Hightower was frequently partnered with Hooks, highlighting their strong bond and trust in each other.
