The Umbrella Academy Series Conclusion: A Bittersweet Goodbye The Apocalypse is Averted, but at What Cost?: The Umbrella Academy's Bittersweet Conclusion ========== Looking forward to seein everyone at the meetin tomorrow and discussin our strategies, the apocalypse keeps happening due to the existence of The Umbrella Academy. Five realises that the only way to balance everything out is if they never existed, so he goes back to share this with his family, who have retreated back to their original home. They also meet up with Lila's family and Claire, seeing everything come to an end as well. Abigail reveals herself as Gene and explains that she planned to help end the world because this was what was always meant to happen. They sit together peacefully accepting their end as The Cleanse comes and takes them away. So what are the Brellies going to do? After Five explains everything, Viktor notes that the vision he saw is actually the ideal timeline, so they have to cease to exist for everything to return to normal. Lila takes her family and Claire to the subway to stay safe, but decides to join the Hargreeves at the end. They stand around in a circle as The Cleanse gets closer, sharing their final moments together without discussing their favourite memories. As they set the marigold inside them free, they connect one last time as a true family and hope to reunite again. Did they do it? Is everything saved? The main timeline is restored to normalcy, with familiar faces appearing, including The Handler, Grace, and others. Reginald's voiceover says, "On the twelfth hour on the eighth day of August 2024, absolutely nothing out of the ordinary occurred." But that's not all - a post-credit scene shows eight marigold flowers blooming in the park, bringing our favourite family together one last time. The Umbrella Academy is over, and the Netflix series managed to take down countless timelines and a whole family of superheroes with it. The show ended this week with a six-episode arc that messily, confusingly, and satisfyingly closed the book on the story of the Hargreeves family once and for all. The emotional conclusion is heartfelt, but not exactly logically airtight. Revisiting elements like marigold can help make sense of the newly reset timeline and its place in the show's multiverse.The team stumbles upon a mysterious jar of marigold that The Keepers uncovered. The Keepers believe this dimension is not the "true" timeline and that an event called The Cleanse will return everything to normal. Ben, who's alive in this timeline, uses the marigold to regain his powers, while Klaus receives it when he dies and becomes sober. The marigold's role in the Umbrella Academy's demise is a pivotal moment in the series. The show's conclusion reveals that the Hargreeves' actions, including the use of the marigold, have created a multiverse where each timeline ends in catastrophe. The Fives from different timelines gather at a diner, discussing their failure to save their worlds. One explanation suggests that the marigold's power has caused the fabric of space-time to become unstable, leading to the creation of thousands of parallel universes. The Fate of Side Characters in "The Umbrella Academy" As the show's four seasons concluded, it became apparent that nearly every side character suffered collateral damage. There was no grand revelation or pivotal moment for the inhabitants of the true timeline; they remained blissfully unaware of the alternate realities. The long-absent narrator reflected on this, commenting on the world without the Hargreeves, stating "On the 12th hour of the eighth day of August 2024, absolutely nothing out of the ordinary occurred," before concluding "You might say it was just a normal day." Despite the complexity of the show's timey-wimey plot, the conclusion was both hopeful and dark, with the team's self-sacrifice serving as a turning point. The final episode addressed some of the season's biggest mysteries, including the origins of the Hargreeves and the nature of "The Cleanse." The twist about Earth's technological development added an extra layer of complexity to the story. Notably, the Handler was shown using a cellphone in the final scene, which may have been perceived as jarring given the show's historical lack of cellphones. The show's conclusion was both effective and flawed. On one hand, it provided a sense of closure for the characters and their struggles. However, some viewers might find the resolution unsatisfying due to the complexity of the plot and the characters' inconsistent development. The ending of The Umbrella Academy's fourth season presented a shocking reality that defied expectations, embracing a definitive conclusion rather than the multiverse's typical loop. One notable aspect is the Handler's appearance in the final scene, where she uses a cellphone. This departure from the show's established technology lag stands out as significant. The absence of cellphones throughout The Umbrella Academy was a deliberate narrative choice, allowing the series to maintain its futuristic yet retro atmosphere. In seasons 1 and 2 set in 2019, this lack of modern technology contributed to the mysterious ambiance. However, the final two episodes shifted focus, introducing Reginald's timeline without cellphones, thereby adding depth. The consequences of the Hargreeves' actions on Earth's technological development are a subject of intrigue. Their birth sparked an anomaly that halted progress in technology, evident even in the 2019 timelines where they resided. By sacrificing themselves and erasing their existence from history, the Cleanse secured the marigold particles needed to prevent apocalyptic events. The conclusion also underscores the cyclical nature of The Umbrella Academy's narrative. Despite saving the world multiple times, each scenario ultimately leads to another catastrophic outcome, reinforcing that the family's very presence is the source of these apocalypses. By shattering traditional multiverse storytelling, The Umbrella Academy opted for a conclusive ending rather than perpetuating an infinite loop of timelines. This deliberate choice serves as a testament to the series' willingness to confront its own narrative constraints and deliver a satisfying conclusion that acknowledges the complexity of its characters' existence. ========== Abigail Hargreeves, the sibling who had been presumed dead, was revealed to be the mastermind behind the apocalypse plot. Her desire for self-sacrifice and redemption led her to create a device that could synthesize power-giving marigold and durango, setting off a chain reaction that would destroy all timelines except for one. The siblings ultimately made the collective choice to cease to exist in order to prevent this from happening, as removing themselves from history was the only way to eradicate the other timelines. The Keepers, an extremist group led by Dr. Gene and Dr. Jean Thibedaeu, were shown to be correct in their assessment that everyone was living in the wrong reality. The finale's jargon-filled tone made it difficult to achieve a smooth transition between time travel and alien explanations without resorting to heavy exposition. The Jennifer Incident, which had occurred 16 years prior, was revisited, revealing that Ben and Jennifer had first met when they were both shot by Reginald in 2006. However, this event had done nothing to prevent the impending apocalypse. As the story progressed, it became clear that Abigail's actions were driven by a desire to correct her mistake from the past. The finale bookended the series by having the siblings reunite for their collective funeral, highlighting the show's focus on family and relationships. Despite some plot developments being lost in translation due to the large gaps between seasons, the ensemble cast remained endearing and the complex relationships they shared were a major draw for viewers. To fully understand the finale, it was necessary to rewind back to the Season 1 finale, where Abigail first appeared on her deathbed, releasing marigold particles into the atmosphere. This event had sparked the spontaneous births that led to The Umbrella Academy.The fate of Abigail and Reginald's relationship hung precariously as the final season unfolded its universe-spanning narrative. With Abigail's presence by his side, Reginald exhibited a newfound empathy for those in his life, but this was tempered by her keen insight that his actions were driven by hubris rather than love. The Umbrella Academy expertly showcased how power and personal bonds intersected, particularly in the poignant conclusion to their marital journey. Meanwhile, Ben's sacrifice served as a powerful display of putting others first, with Sparrow Academy Ben momentarily taking control to save Viktor. Despite his newfound capacity for empathy, however, Ben struggled to connect with his siblings and find closure. Ritu Arya's portrayal of Lila stole the show, bringing depth and nuance to her character. The complexity of her emotions - shame, fear, and acceptance - were conveyed through her interactions with Diego and Five. Their romance, which blossomed into marriage and parenthood in a world without powers, left Lila feeling restless. The introduction of a love triangle between Lila, Five, and Diego added an unexpected layer to the narrative, but it also served as a natural progression of their existing dynamic. The finale's emotional payoff was amplified by the chemistry between the cast members, particularly Klaus, Allison, and Luther reacting with levity from the sidelines. The Many Fives sequence took bold creative risks, featuring actors playing opposite versions of themselves in a visually stunning and emotionally resonant sequence that underscored the ultimate sacrifices they had to make.The Umbrella Academy's time-traveling subway loop takes a dramatic turn as Five confronts his own existence. In a chaotic deli filled with dozens of other Fives, he realizes they are the root cause of the never-ending cycle of saving and ending the world. ========== The scene brings everything full circle as it is confirmed that overseeing the time-space continuum was an attempt to solve the shattered timeline issue. Gallagher shines in this episode, playing conflicting emotions and deft comic timing. The Umbrella Academy's fate is sealed when the siblings decide to wipe themselves from history to save the original timeline. ========== This means Lila and Diego's extended family will lose their memories of their parents, while others with a marigold in them will be absorbed into the giant Cleanse monster. Lila's sacrifice weighs heavily on her as she heads to the subway, setting up a gut-punch reaction. Personal sacrifice threads throughout the season, adding to our emotional connection to these complex characters. ========== Viktor's showdown with Reginald is heartwarming, and Diego's final words of love make Lila tear up. The ensemble cast delivers brilliant performances, including Klaus's cheesy sentimentality and Luther's rebuffed witticisms. As the Cleanse consumes them, their last interaction is a poignant moment of love and acceptance. ========== The end-credits scene reinforces that even if they've been wiped from memory, their existence means something. The fact that other family members live on means they still exist in some form. This season finale showcases a satisfying resolution to the series, leaving viewers with a sense of closure and new possibilities.The Hargreeves' Ultimate Sacrifice: A New Beginning for the Multiverse ========== === The highly anticipated fourth season of The Umbrella Academy has come to an end, leaving fans with a mix of emotions - sadness, hope, and a hint of uncertainty. The show's conclusion was a culmination of eight years of timelines, apocalypses, and superpowers, all tied together by the Hargreeves' unbreakable bond. The siblings made the ultimate sacrifice by erasing themselves to save the universe from the impending apocalypse. The mid-credits scene revealed eight golden flowers, symbolizing their legacy, paying tribute to the price they paid for saving humanity. As the story progressed, it became clear that Abigail's actions had set off a chain reaction, leading to the apocalypse. The Hargreeves' powers were reignited when they stumbled upon a jar of marigolds in Sy Grossman's possession, setting them on a mission to find Jennifer and unravel the mysteries behind the apocalypse. Throughout their journey, the team encountered shocking revelations - Jennifer was under Reginald's protection, the Keepers believed in a catastrophic event known as "The Cleanse" to restore the main timeline, and Five discovered that he and his siblings were responsible for ending the world in countless timelines. In a bold move, Five understood that the only way to save the universe was to let the cleanse consume him and his marigolds. This sacrifice led to the erasure of their existence from history, leaving behind only eight golden flowers as a reminder of their heroism. The final scene showed the main timeline, where various characters from past seasons were living happily ever after, while the Hargreeves were absent. This confirmed that their sacrifice had fixed the multiverse, but at a great cost - they were completely erased from existence. The ending left fans wondering if the Hargreeves are truly dead or just erased from reality. The ambiguity surrounding their fate is sure to spark debate among fans, as we continue to process the emotional rollercoaster that was The Umbrella Academy season 4.The flowers represent Luther (Tom Hopper), Diego (David Castañeda), Allison (Emmy Raver-Lampman), Klaus (Robert Sheehan), Five, Ben (Justin H. Min), Viktor, and Lila. They show that the characters are still present even though they died. Reginald's wife made marigolds to remember them after their sacrifice. There is also a "durango" particle that can destroy everything if it meets a marigold. Ben died when he touched Jennifer in the original timeline. This also happened in the current timeline, but after Gene and Jean hit the van, which started the cleanse. The cleanse was caused by the apocalyptic reaction of durango with marigolds. Jennifer hosted durango and triggered the apocalypse. She merged with Ben to become a monster that consumed everything. Unfortunately, Viktor couldn't save Ben. The Hargreeves had to be erased from history so no one would remember them. Without them, characters like the Handler don't have to work for The Commission or chase the Hargreeses across timelines. Reginald was a bit more understanding but also wanted to kill Ben. He set up a town to protect Jennifer and agreed to help the Hargreeves regain their memories of how Ben died in their original timeline. However, Viktor convinced him not to kill Ben. Viktor and Reginald worked together in season 4. Viktor told Reginald that he didn't deserve to be treated the way his Reginald was. Reginald welcomed the end of the world with Abigail by his side. It's unknown if Reginald is alive or not. If the Hargreeves' sacrifice undid their whole existence, then Reginald might have died with Abigail when their home planet was destroyed.The Umbrella Academy's Dark Conclusion: A Family's Sacrifice for the Greater Good The Hargreeves siblings, collectively known as The Umbrella Academy, were once a family bound by their superpowers and a troubled past. After their adoptive father passed away, they reunited to face an apocalyptic future. Their journey was marked by love, loss, and sacrifice. As the series progressed, it became clear that the apocalypse was not just a plot twist but a reality that The Umbrella Academy had to confront. The siblings' unique abilities made them the key to preventing the end of the world. Abigail, a complex character with a mysterious past, played a crucial role in the story. She created the marigolds and durango, which held the key to the apocalypse. Her actions were motivated by a desire to set things right, even if it meant sacrificing herself. In the series finale, The Umbrella Academy made the ultimate sacrifice to restore the timeline. They agreed to cease to exist in order to save the world from destruction. This act of selflessness was not taken lightly, and its consequences are still felt. The final scene showed Reginald and Abigail's home planet, a reminder of the sacrifices they made. Their story served as a poignant reminder that families, even with time apart, can always come back together. The creator, Steve Blackman, had always envisioned the ending from the beginning. The siblings' sacrifice was a necessary step to restore the timeline and create a new reality. In an interview, Blackman discussed his vision for the series finale. He wanted to show that families can overcome even the darkest challenges by coming together. The Umbrella Academy's conclusion left many questions unanswered, but it also raised more. What does it mean to be a superhero when the true cost is unknown? Can Ben and Jennifer have lived happily ever after in another timeline? The series finale was a powerful statement about family, love, and sacrifice. The Hargreeves siblings' story will be remembered for years to come as a testament to their bravery and selflessness. By accepting the fate that had been laid out before them, The Umbrella Academy proved that sometimes, the greatest act of love is giving everything up for the greater good.It was a notion that had been perused by the author, inquiring if one could truly be a superhero if their existence remained unseen. The concept of superheroes and their definition was explored, alongside the idea that if no one ever knew that they were the ones who saved them, would it still count as heroism? What emotions would this evoke, especially for the family members left behind, whose memories of these individuals would be all that remained? The author envisioned an ending where the heroes wouldn't actually "die," but rather cease to exist in a manner that would never be recognized by anyone. The only records of their sacrifices and heroic deeds would remain within the surviving family, but the world at large would be oblivious to their efforts. A subversion of traditional expectations was aimed for in this narrative, where the hero's triumph or defeat wouldn't necessarily dictate the outcome. Instead, the author opted for a different approach. The Umbrella Academy's Family is What Truly Matters ========== Luther's journey in the show is one to be admired. He may not know what his powers are or how they work, but at the end of Season 4, he appreciates family more than anything else. His actions are always centered around keeping those close to him safe and together. Justin H. Min: I think playing a superhero should be in everyone's life, even if it's just imagining it in the mirror. You can make yourself feel great by doing your "mirror work." There was something special about the post-credits scene with eight marigold flowers appearing. We might assume they belong to the Brellies, but really, we don't know for sure. Blackman: It could be just ordinary flowers or what's left of them that somehow changed into others. The audience should decide what it actually means and whether there could be more Umbrella Academy episodes in the future. Many fans will find comfort in seeing the show come to a close, but some might feel negatively towards the ending. Blackman believes his decision was right for the series, serving as a fitting conclusion. The wait until the final season to explain Ben's death and Jennifer's incident was deliberate. The graphic novel had already portrayed their guilt over not discussing these topics, so it seemed necessary to resolve this in the show as well. Blackman: In the comic book, the Jennifer incident is a big mystery. We decided to end it here for our show, though the creators of the graphic novel might do something different next. Justin H. Min: I was surprised when I found out Ben died, but looking back, it makes sense given what happened in the story. The original timeline broke because Abigail created a God particle that destroyed her world. She didn't realize this and so lost everything. Her husband, Luther, couldn't save her and took her with him instead. He hoped Marigold would help them somehow.He believed he had control over his destiny from the start, with extra powerful allies to aid him in his crusade to reclaim his wife. However, he couldn't maintain control over his children or himself. He released Marigold in the hope that it would bring forth these special children. Unfortunately, Durango arrived along with it, and Abigail now feels responsible for unleashing this calamity. Blackman: That's right, she believes she committed a terrible sin by asking him to bring her back. She didn't want to be revived, feeling that death was the only acceptable fate for her transgressions. The original timeline fractured because Marigold's presence on Earth wasn't intended. Blackman continued, "The home planet of Hargreeves and Abigail was annihilated by The Cleanse, a disaster caused by Marigold and Durango together. This catastrophe consumed the entire planet in a matter of time. Abigail inadvertently created this chaos when she brought Marigold into being." This major revelation shows that Hargreeves erased his children's memories and killed Ben, seemingly for the greater good. However, it was actually the version from another timeline who shot him. This alternate Hargreeves seems to have intended for the same outcome. Blackman concluded, "The fate of Ben remains unknown since he wasn't present during the memory restoration process. Although it's unseen, I imagine someone mentioning his disappearance on that van ride, prompting Klaus to ask about Ben." The decision to pair Lila with Five this season was a bold move by Blackman. He believed Five needed a love story due to his age and unique circumstances. The pairing of these two extreme opposites might raise questions among fans, but it ultimately led to a sweet connection between them. Aidan Gallagher added that Five possesses an extraordinary selflessness, making him both admirable and intriguing.The world may be ending, but for those who love superheroes, the real battle is just beginning. According to the show's creators, the most important thing is to push forward, even if it feels like everything is falling apart. For Five, this means finding his purpose in life - and it's not as simple as he thought. The Umbrella Academy's Bittersweet Conclusion: A New Reality ---------- I have mixed feelings about the conclusion of The Umbrella Academy. You know, looking back on everything and I think it was a beautiful chapter in my life as an actor and within the show's context. I feel really lucky to have been part of this incredible cast and crew, who are indeed like family. I will miss being on set with them, laughing together. Elliot Page: What means so much to me is being here with these people I've spent many years with, getting to be a part of this amazing show. I'm feeling incredibly grateful that we got four seasons. It was my privilege to play this role and connect with fans, which has been really nice. Arya: I will miss the cast and everyone involved so much. This group of people is just beautiful. Not just the actors, but also all the crew, creators, and fans. It's made this experience truly unforgettable. Gerard Way: Honestly, I loved their enthusiasm. It's a great group of people who have fun together. And because it wasn't about stopping that, on purpose, it grew into something beautiful and its own thing. ========== This interview has been edited and condensed for length and clarity.Watch The Umbrella Academy Season 4 Trailer After four seasons of sibling drama, time travel, and apocalypses, The Umbrella Academy was all wrapped up. But the final episode left viewers scratching their heads, as any other season's finale would. Did the Hargreeves siblings really get the universe fixed this time? Who made it out alive? And what was going on with that new timeline? Don't worry — if you're scratching your head (like most of us were), we've got an explanation. Let's dissect what actually occurred in that last episode and what it signifies for every character. Rewriting reality, Hargreeves style Season 4 picks up right after the end of Season 3, where Reginald Hargreeves uses the Oblivion machine to reset the universe. Of course, things don't go as planned. The siblings wake up in a strange new world — one that feels eerily perfect but is clearly under Reginald's control. Gone are their powers, and gone is the chaos. At first glance, it seems like a happy ending. But this is The Umbrella Academy — happy is never that simple.
