Thursday, February 13, 2025, ABC News Studios presents "The Fox Hollow Murders: Playground of a Serial Killer" on Hulu. This new true crime docuseries explores the double life of businessman and father Herb Baumeister, who led a secret life as a serial killer targeting gay men in Indianapolis suburbs throughout the 1990s. The series premieres February 18 on Hulu. In this four-part documentary, Hamilton County coroner Jeff Jellison re-opens an investigation into thousands of bones found behind Fox Hollow Farms, Baumeister's stately home. Using DNA technology, the team identifies human remains and brings closure to victims' families while uncovering unsettling questions about potential accomplices, missing evidence, and changing witness accounts. Exclusive interviews include a survivor, Mark Goodyear, who reveals his face for the first time in an on-camera interview, and additional insights from investigators, relatives of Baumeister's victims, Fox Hollow Farm's current owner, and cold case experts.In a shocking twist, thousands of human remains were uncovered on the grounds of Fox Hollow Farm, the sprawling estate once owned by notorious serial killer Herb Baumeister. Baumeister's dark secrets began to unravel in the early 1990s when several men went missing from Indianapolis' downtown bars, with many speculating that he targeted gay individuals. His son's discovery of a human skull on their property in 1994 sparked a renewed interest in the case, but it wasn't until Baumeister took his own life in Canada in 1996 that authorities were finally able to search the estate and uncover the extent of his atrocities.The investigation into Baumeister's crimes has seen significant developments in recent years. In 2022, Hamilton County Coroner Jeff Jellison reopened the case and spearheaded a new effort to identify the victims using cutting-edge DNA analysis. This led to the identification of Daniel Thomas Halloran as the tenth victim through genetic genealogy testing and a DNA match sourced from his late mother's autopsy file.Halloran's story is particularly tragic, as he was just one of many men lured by Baumeister to their deaths. His daughter, who was just 2 years old at the time of his death, has finally received closure with her father's identification. The coroner's office has also identified 27-year-old Allen Livingston and confirmed the identities of two previously named victims through updated DNA analysis.Baumeister's crimes remain one of the most heinous in American history, with estimates suggesting that over 25 men may have fallen victim to his brutality. His true extent of his atrocities may never be fully known, but thanks to advances in forensic science and the determination of investigators like Jellison, some measure of justice is finally being served for the families of those who were lost.In the dark woods, Baumeister penned a heartfelt three-page suicide note expressing regret over his faltering marriage and cautioning about the mess he'd leave behind at the park where he planned to end his life. Meanwhile, in Indiana, the original case was woefully underreported, failing to make any TV news outlets, according to Ted Fleischaker, publisher of The Word. The investigation into Baumeister's alleged crimes was marred by a lack of attention towards the victims, who were largely gay men, criticized Hamilton County Coroner Jellison for the 1990s-era probe. Confirmed victims include Roger Alan Goodlet, Michael Frederick Keirn, Steven Spurlin Hale, Manuel M. Resendez, Jeffrey Allan Jones, Richard Douglas Hamilton Jr., Johnny Bayer, Allen Wayne Broussard, Allen Livingston, and Daniel Thomas Halloran, all of whom vanished in Indianapolis during the early to mid-1990s. The Fox Hollow Murders: A Serial Killer's Playground docuseries is available exclusively on Hulu, offering a deep dive into the case through archival footage, family interviews, and expert commentary. With four episodes ranging from 40 to 60 minutes each, the series delves into Baumeister's life, the victims' stories, and the re-examination of the evidence. Authorities continue to process new samples for DNA testing, expecting more identifications in the ongoing case, which Jellison describes as the second-largest investigation of unidentified human remains in the US.Anyone from the Indianapolis area, especially those connected to the local LGBTQ+ community, who may have information relevant to DNA sampling, are invited to get in touch with the Hamilton County Coroner's Office for more details at 317-770-4415.
